SPRING BREAK

Alternative memories

The rebuilding effort of Greensburg, Kan., was elevated during the spring break season. Several K-State students traveled to volunteer in Greensburg.

GREENSBURG, Kan. – Hammering nails, setting roof trusses and sleeping on military cots might not sound like a typical Spring Break getaway. However, 12 K-State students chose this alternative break in Greensburg, Kan., rather than a tropical destination.

"This sounded like a good way to spend my time, so I decided to come to Greensburg and give my time," said Megan Holton, volunteer and junior in milling science. "It didn't make me to nervous that I didn't know how to do anything with construction. There was always something to do even if you weren't that great with power tools."

The week started when the group, sponsored by the office of Civic Leadership and Ecumenical Campus Ministry, traveled to Pratt, Kan. where they stayed at First Christian Church and were sponsored by Disciples Home Missions. DHM provides organized mission trips throughout the U.S. and arranges alternative spring breaks.

After DHM staff members Carl and Robin Zerweck provided a brief overview of the upcoming week, the students found out exactly where they would be working.

TOP 10 SPRING BREAK SPOTS

1. Cancun, Mexico
2. Acapulco, Mexico
3. Florida — Panama City, Miami
4. Rosarito Beach, Baja
5. North American Ski Resorts
6. Europe — Amsterdam, London and Paris will be the cities in which you'll see the most American students, with Rome a close fourth place followed by Florence, Frankfurt, Madrid and Berlin.
7. Negril, Jamaica
8. Puerto Vallarta, Mexico
9. South Padre Island

Students work with pets in New Orleans

Shawna Castillo, came back to Manhattan with more than just memories after her week-long stint in New Orleans for an alternative spring break.

After volunteering at a local animal shelter, which houses 95 dogs and 20 cats and was damaged by Hurricane Katrina over two years ago, Castillo, junior in animal sciences didn't leave the shelter empty handed – she ended up adopting the dog from the shelter.

Castillo was one of the 30 K-State students who went to the Hurricane Katrina disaster site in New Orleans to help the residents with the different issues that arose because of the hurricane.

When arriving to the shelter, Castillo said she had had a personal connection with a deaf dog. She said she fell in love with the dog as soon as she saw it.

"It's the best spring break that I ever had – it wasn't all work and no play – I definitely had a good time," Castillo said.

When the students arrived in New Orleans, they were divided into three groups of 10.

Child and sexual crime ex-prosecutor to visit K-State

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Victims' rights advocate Wendy Murphy will visit K-State on Tuesday in light of Women's History Month in March and to lead into Sexual Assault Awareness month in April.

MURPHY

Murphy will make two presentations in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall. Both events are free and open to the public. At 10 a.m. she will present "And Justice For Some," which is also the title of her new book. At 4 p.m. she will present "Rape and the Failure of Law Reform: What's Wrong and What You Can Do."

Murphy, an ex-prosecutor who specialized in child abuse and sex crimes cases, was the first lawyer in the country to run a program to provide free legal services to crime victims.

Murphy now represents crime victims in civil and criminal cases and teaches an advanced seminar on sexual violence at the New England School of Law in Boston. She has also worked as a legal analyst for CBS News, CNN, Fox News and MSNBC.

Abby Heraud, graduate student in modern languages and president of Wildcats Against Rape, said Murphy's talk will be relevant in many ways to the K-State community.

One out of every six American women have been the victims of an attempted or completed rape in their lifetime, according to the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network. With this statistic, many people on campus will know a victim of crime on one level or another, including their friends, family members, colleagues and professors, Heraud said.

"In a community that is susceptible to such crime, it is very important for people to know what options are out there – the ways in which things should happen, the way they really happen, and what can be done to change our society," Heraud said. "We live in a society where many sexual assault cases are still a matter of 'his word against hers.'"

Heraud said there also is a lack of funding for DNA processing in court cases, which means DNA is sometimes not ready at the time of trial. These factors, combined with the rape myths that our society still considers true, lead to trials that are unfair to victims of violent crime, Heraud said.

Heraud said Murphy's talks are not exclusively for people interested in the topic of sexual assault.

"Her specialization in legal reform makes her talks open to a broader audience," Heraud said. "Anyone who has ever experienced the ways in which our system works [or at times doesn't], anyone who is remotely interested in the law, politics, and creating change – or simply anyone who is interested in learning something new and different, with which they may have no prior knowledge."

Mary Todd, director of the K-State Women's Center, said in the past year she has worked with dozens of K-State women who have been raped. She said she has also worked with many boyfriends, friends and family members who are affected by rape.

For more info about Wendy Murphy, and to read a free excerpt, students can go the the women's center Web site and click on her picture in the middle of the page.

Sponsors of Murphy's visit include Wildcats Against Rape, Student Governing Association, Women's Center, Lafene Women's Clinic, Department of Political Science, Women's Studies Program, Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, University Honors Program, Flint Hills Sexual Assault Coalition and University Counseling Services.

As the faculty adviser for Wildcats Against Rape, Todd said she is proud of the work that the students have put into bringing Murphy to campus.

"I hope the entire student body will take advantage of this event," Todd said. "Her book, 'And Justice for Some,' is not for sissies. Bring a strong heart to to hear and read about the grave injustices that are happening right now."

Ft. Riley uses foreign weapons

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On a quiet field in the middle of Fort Riley, a red flag, raised high in the air and waving furiously, reached for the grey-blue sky. Soldiers know what this flag means: Get your protective gear on, because this this field is hot. If you aren't careful, you could be killed.

On Range 7, one of the many firing ranges at Fort Riley, Sergeant Benjamin Snow barked orders and safety tips at on-looking soldiers during a foreign weapons training session. But these soldiers aren't average patriots; they are part of the Army's Military Transition Teams – select groups of men and women chosen from across the country, stationed exclusively at Fort Riley, and trained to teach Iraq and Afghanistan soldiers.

Out on the range, Class 41 of the MiTT followed Snow's lead, shattering the silence of the field, firing round after round of foreign weapons.

"We do this to so that when they get to Iraq and they have to use these weapons and teach their counterpart how to use these weapons, then they will know," said Sergeant James Lewis, range safety officer.

These counterparts are Iraqi and Afghani soldiers and police, said Lewis, whom the MiTT will train on tactic and weaponry so the armies will eventually be able to "secure themselves" and the United States will be able to reduce the amount of American soldiers overseas.

Unlike the American weapons trainings in which soldiers must hit a specific number of targets 100-300 meters away to qualify for the day, Snow said the foreign weapons training is simply for the soldiers to get used to the guns.

"The purpose of this training is for foreign weapons familiarization for the Transition Teams that will be deploying to Iraq and Afghanistan to work in conjunction with the Iraqi and Afghani army," he said. "It's not so much a hit count, like the American weapons training, for qualification. Their main objective when they're out here is to become familiar with the safe operation of the [foreign] weapons system."

Lt. Colonel Kevin West said for the American weapons trainings, the MiTTs must hit 7 out of 14 targets on an M2 .50 caliber machine gun, and 8 out

THIS WEEK

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1976: PEYTON MANNING BORN

Peyton Manning was born in New Orleans to Archie and Olivia Manning. Peyton began his own football career at Isidore Newman High School in New Orleans. In 1998, Manning was drafted by the Indianapolis Colts as the first pick overall. He started every game that year, and had never missed a start in his pro career through the 2006 season. In Super Bowl XLI, on February 4, 2007, the Colts defeated the Bears 29-17, and Manning was named Super Bowl MVP.

TUESDAY 1634: SETTLEMENT OF MARYLAND

The first colonists to Maryland arrived at St. Clement's Island on Maryland's western shore and founded the settlement of St. Mary's. In 1632, King Charles I of England granted a charter to George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, yielding him proprietary rights to a region east of the Potomac River in exchange for a share of the income derived from the land. The territory was named Maryland in honor of Henrietta Maria, the queen consort of Charles I.

WEDNESDAY 1953: SALK ANNOUNCES POLIO VACCINE

American medical researcher Dr. Jonas Salk announced on a national radio show that he has successfully tested a vaccine against poliomyelitis, the virus that causes the crippling disease of polio. In 1952 — an epidemic year for polio — there were 58,000 new cases reported in the United States, and more than 3,000 died from the disease.

THURSDAY 1964: EARTHQUAKE ROCKS ALASKA

The strongest earthquake in American history, measuring 8.4 on the Richter scale, slams southern Alaska, creating a deadly tsunami. Some 125 people were killed and thousands injured.

The massive earthquake's epicenter was located in the Prince William Sound, about eight miles northeast of Anchorage, but approximately 300,000 square miles of U.S., Canadian, and international territory were affected. Anchorage — Alaska's largest city — sustained the most property damage, with about 30 blocks of dwellings and commercial buildings damaged or destroyed in the downtown area. Fifteen people were killed or fatally injured as a direct result of the three-minute quake, and then the ensuing tsunami killed another 110 people.

FRIDAY 1969: PRESIDENT EISENHOWER DIES

Dwight D. Eisenhower, the 34th president of the United States and one of the most highly regarded American generals of World War II, died in Washington, D.C., at the age of 78.

Born in Denison, Texas, in 1890, Eisenhower graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1915, and after World War I he steadily rose in the peacetime ranks of the U.S. Army. After the U.S. entrance into World War II, he was appointed commanding general of the European theater of operations and oversaw U.S. troops massing in Great Britain.

In November 1952, "Ike" won a resounding victory in the presidential elections and in 1956 was reelected in a landslide. A popular president, he oversaw a period of great economic growth in the United States and deftly navigated the country through increasing Cold War tension on the world stage. He died in 1969 and was buried on a family plot in Abilene, Kan.

International Games unite students

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Celebrating cultural understanding and sensitivity through sports is the purpose of the K-State International Championship Games.

Lenka Hadamova, graduate assistant at the International Student Center, said the championships will serve as a good way for students to get to know each other.

"Having fun together and playing sports together is a good way to socialize," she said.

Hadamova said she encourages U.S. students to step outside of their comfort zones and get involved in the games.

"It is more difficult in the classroom to reach out to international students because of the language and culture barrier," she said. "But if it's sports, you know the rules, so you don't need to worry so much."

The deadline to enter is March 31. Teams without enough players can sign up at the International Student Center to find more team members.

Teams will compete in volleyball, soccer, basketball, table tennis and badminton from April 14-20 during the evening at Peters Recreation Complex. Game times will be announced when all applications are turned in.

To play, there is a fee of $8 per person that includes the cost of a team T-shirt. Each additional sport is $1 per participant.

All students, non-students, faculty, staff and community members are welcome to enter. Teams must have at least 50 percent of their players be of international origin and teams can be coeducational.

Players who place first, second and third in each sport will receive an engraved, ribboned medallion.

The idea of the games began with a phone call from Steve Martini, director of the Rec Complex, to Maria Bebe, assistant director at the International Student Center. Martini asked Bebe if there is a way to attract more international students to the Rec Complex.

Martini said there are many international students who come to the Rec Complex to work out and play sports, but he said he wanted to encourage all international students to get involved in what the Rec Complex has to offer.

"I'm really excited that it is going to happen," he said. "It is good for students to come out and watch, even if they're not playing."

With the events following K-State's International Week, the coordinators of the championships said they are hoping for a big turnout.

Kathleen Witcher, events coordinator for the Office of International Programs, said the International Coordinating Council and International Student Center has planned for the games since last fall.

The events were originally supposed to be coined The International Olympics; however, after being denied permission of the usage of the word "Olympics" the coordinators had to change the name to "Championships" last month.

In the past, talk of having similar events were not acted on because of funding issues. This year, the games will be self-sponsored by private donors and companies, Witcher said.

Hadamova, the main student coordinator of the events, said she is aiming for a big turnout.

"This is something that we hope to make a tradition here at K-State," she said.

CITY COMMISSION

City discusses Discovery Center task force

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners discussed whether they would be for or against the construction of a new Discovery Center in the south downtown redevelopment project area Tuesday night.

STRAWN

Commissioners voted unanimously to appoint a consultant to the task of finding whether a museum in the area would be feasible.

Commissioner Bob Strawn said he's not in favor of the Discovery Center and said he hopes the consultant will be unbiased in the report, whether the building is a good idea or bad.

"I have never accepted the principles that there aren't options available to us," Strawn said. "If the consultant says it's a bad idea and it doesn't have merit and it's going to be a revenue drain on the community, then I say we still have time."

Commissioners also voted unanimously to rezone a lot adjacent to Manhattan Medical Center to a restricted business district. This was in order to match the rest of Manhattan Medical Center's property.

A roundabout also is in the works for the intersection of Bluemont Avenue and Fourth Street. The commission approved funding to help set up the city financially to get started on projects.

The estimated cost of the roundabout project is $2,796,935, according to the meeting's agenda.

Commissioners are already receiving about utility plans for the south redevelopment project. Representatives from HWS Construction gave a presentation of their plans for the water, storm-water drainage and power-line routes.

Drinking age should span all college students

AUBREE CASPER

If 18-year-old Americans can make the decision to join the military and risk dying for their country, why can't they handle the decision to responsibly drink alcohol?

According to a recent article in USA Today, legislators are once again attempting to find a resolution to this debate that began in 1984 after Congress passed the National Minimum Drinking Age Act, raising the alcohol drinking and purchasing age from 18 to 21 years of age.

The story reported that states like Kentucky, South Carolina and Wisconsin now possess legislative proposals pushing for a military exemption from the minimum drinking age law.

At least three other states are carrying debates with goals varying from allowing adults of at least age 18 to order alcoholic drinks in restaurants and bars but not liquor stores until age 21 and dismissing the minimum age for 18 to 20 year olds who complete alcohol education courses.

While all 50 states follow the current national minimum age of 21, the consequences they face from the federal government if they amend state laws, as USA Today reported, seem almost laughable. The Alcohol Policy Information System said on its Web site that failure to follow the law would result in the withholding of 10 percent of the federal highway funds allotted for that state. However, the fear of losing any federal funds has held off the process of changing laws until now.

One aspect of cutting out millions of potential drinkers and purchasers of alcohol has yet to be addressed, however. What if Congress lowered the drinking and purchasing age to 18 in state-funded college towns like Manhattan?

If a customer can present the liquor store employee with a state college ID, they would be able to purchase and drink alcohol and financially, a carefully planned tax plan could prove to be a win-win situation for students and government officials.

Based on reports from Manhattan liquor stores in Aggieville and Westloop, the average sale on a an average Friday or Saturday is between $30-$40. That amount easily covers typical "party drinks" including one keg, two cases of beer or one or two handles of hard alcohol, according to advertisements at Manhattan stores.

If the federal government allows for a lower drinking age of 18 in college towns, a tax could be added to each purchase. An additional 2 percent tax on beer and wine and 5 percent tax on hard alcohol purchased by consumers younger than age 25 (age 25 in consideration of the probability that a buyer of this age would be more difficult to find should students continue to have others buy alcohol to avoid the tax).

These extra taxes could be used to do proactive projects like support the local college and lower tuition and even be put back into alcohol awareness and education programs for students and as designated driving services.

Theoretically, the additional tax on each purchase would be an average of 60 cents on a case of beer and $1.50 on hard alcohol. With about 100 transactions per night for any given liquor store, the community and university could profit anywhere between $60-$150 per night.

If a college town has an average of five liquor stores contributing (based on search results for various U.S. college towns), multiplied by at least two nights of this amount of business per week, times 40 weeks per year, that institution can see an excess of $24,000-60,000 annually (and most likely closer to $100,000) to enable more scholarship money for students or funds to increase alcohol education for students.

Thousands of college students either find themselves in legal trouble or end up dead, because of alcohol and no law will ever be able completely rid our country of underage drinking.

If we remove the taboo of underage drinking for the largest population in contempt of the minimum drinking age, we could possibly focus on teaching responsibility. By lowering the legal age for college towns and using the taxes from such purchases to help treat and avoid alcoholism and promote education and awareness, our nation can see a drastic and positive change in the drinking habits of young adults.

Frivolous spending, materialism root of U.S. economic concern

BLAKE OSBORN

Few times since the 1930s, when the Great Depression hit the American people, have Americans had to worry about the economy. With high gas prices and talk of economic recession, many are starting to tighten their belts. This paradigm shift is a sharp turn for many U.S. citizens.

According to a recent article from the Christian Science Monitor, a new survey from HSBC Bank USA revealed that two out of three consumers want to reduce indulgent spending, while four out of five want to increase the amount of money they save. This revived interest in fiscal matters contrasts with the not-so-frugal spending habits of today's generation of spenders.

This year, Americans at all spending levels are starting to be cognizant of how they spend their money. In a recent article in Newsweek, George Loewenstein, professor of economics and psychology at Carnegie Mellon University, said today's generation has a different view of debt than former generations. He said the availability of cheaper goods, Internet shopping and longer store hours makes it easier for spenders to waste money, according to the article.

Larry Compeau, consumer behaviorist at Clarkson University, observed how consumers less than 40 years old have not had to deal with any "belt tightening" in regard to their spending habits, according to the Newsweek article.

"People in their 30s haven't really experienced a significant or long recessionary period," Compeau said in the article. "I am concerned they won't be able to respond quickly enough to mitigate what may be damage ahead. Not only do people under 40 save less, but they also have less to save."

Historically, Americans have struggled with debt. In an article from the Christian Science Monitor, Ronald Wilcox, author of "Whatever Happened to Thrift? – Why Americans Don't Save and What to Do About It," said this is nothing new.

"Americans have been dealing with debt for a long time," Wilcox said in the article. "Some of the founding fathers were famously in debt, like Jefferson." A significant reason many Americans do not save is because of their perennial optimism.

"One of the consequences of being overly optimistic is that people think tomorrow is probably going to be better than today," Wilcox also said in the article, "so they don't save."

This revival of economic restraint is causing many Americans to forego extra gadgets and gizmos they could otherwise do without, inevitably resulting in sacrifice.

Michael Boss, manager of an Idaho computer business, said in an online news report he is excited to see this kind of revision in the lives of many Americans.

"I do think that collectively we need to recoil from the materialism that has come to define this culture," Boss said in the report. "Spiritually and environmentally, there are all reasons we should do more with less and not feel as though not having all these material things is an abrogation of our birthright as Americans."

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

It is easy to get caught up in the material comforts our society provides for us, especially when the economy is ripe, but then it falls and, that is when many people probe deeper into their own spending habits.

Thus, suffering breeds prudence in regards to financial crises. As college students, we should heed the thrifty admonitions of older generations and not get tangled in the spending spiral that drains so many accounts.

You are what you spend, so spend well.

TO THE EDITOR

Editor,

Being from New York City, I did not expect to see that Kansas, especially a fine institution like K-State, would have blatant racism in the open. The Miriam-Webster dictionary defines racism as; 1: a belief that race is the primary determinant of human traits and capacities and that racial differences produce an inherent superiority of a particular race; 2: racial prejudice or discrimination.

On Feb. 21, K-State hosted a speaker from an organization that promotes the advancement of one race over another. By the very definition above, this organization is racist. Of course this organization is the NAACP.

Then I find out that K-State will have a diversity summit in April. The keynote speaker is to be the "iconic" Mary Francis Berry. This woman is a blatant racist. Berry's worldview holds that white racism remains an intractable and pervasive crisis in America. To understand how her views are racist please refer to the above definition, part 1.

At the so-called diversity summit, Dr. Mike Hill is scheduled to "present a very penetrating analysis of whiteness." Now, I don't believe in racism, but it does appear that K-State does. I am very disappointed in the school administration for not being diligent or keeping with the spirit of equality. My Wildcat pride is a little less knowing that K-State would promote racism.

Kristine Withers
GRADUATE STUDENT IN HISTORY

Editor,

I hope K-State students, faculty, staff and Manhattan residents take the opportunity to spend some time with the war memorial in the middle of campus this week. The K-State Alliance for Peace and Justice has, for the second year in a row, organized the placement of one flag on campus for each soldier who has died in Iraq.

This year, we also have added soldiers who have died in Afghanistan. Each flag includes the soldier's name, age and hometown.

This week provides a special opportunity for our community to connect with the human sacrifices involved in war and with our fellow citizens who have lost their life in our names. At the time of this printing, the U.S. has been in Iraq for more than five years, and we have had about 4,000 U.S. soldiers die there.

As a peace and justice group, we feel strongly that the loss of life in war is our best argument against such acts of state violence.

However, out of sensitivity, we are limiting our group's peaceful statements to tabling outside the K-State Student Union during the lunch hours.

I invite anyone reading this to engage our group, as well as your friends and family about this war and the loss of life associated with it.

If the sight of 4,500 flags, each representing someone's family member, moves you to want to take an action against war, please come to the weekly war protest from 4:30 p.m. - 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at Triangle Park by Varney's Bookstore.

U.S. news to catch up on from spring break

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WORKERS PUNISHED FOR RECORDS' BREACH

WASHINGTON – Two companies that provide workers for the State Department have fired or punished workers who improperly accessed the passport records of the three major presidential candidates.

Stanley, Inc., based in Arlington, Va., and The Analysis Corp., or TAC, of McLean, Va., said Friday that their employees' actions were unauthorized and not consistent with company policies. Stanley said it fired two subcontractors involved in accessing the files of Sen. Barack Obama when their actions were discovered.

A State Department spokesman said a separate search showed that workers had snooped on Sen. John McCain and Sen. Hillary Clinton.

TAC said it had been notified earlier in the day that one of its contractors had acted improperly – in this case, according to the State Department, by accessing Obama's records.

TAC decided to honor a State Department request to delay firing the consultant to give investigators time to conduct its investigation, the company said.

A fourth worker tapped into Clinton's records as part of a training session last summer, the State Department said, and that violation was immediately recognized and the person admonished.

OBAMA CONFRONTS RACIAL DIVISION

PHILADELPHIA – Barack Obama confronted the nation's racial divide head-on, tackling both black grievance and white resentment in a bold effort to quiet a campaign uproar over race and his former pastor's incendiary statements.

OBAMA

On Tuesday, Obama urged the nation to break "a racial stalemate we've been stuck in for years."

"The anger is real," he said. "It is powerful, and to simply wish it away, to condemn it without understanding its roots, only serves to widen the chasm of misunderstanding that exists between the races."

The speech, at the National Constitution Center, was by far the most prominent airing of racial issues in Obama's 13-month campaign to become the first black U.S. president. It was prompted by the wider notice his former pastor's racial statements have been receiving in the past week or so.

He said he recognized his race has been a significant issue in a campaign that has taken a "particularly divisive turn." Many people have been turning to the Internet to view statements by his longtime pastor, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright, who suggested in one sermon that the United States brought the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on itself and in another said blacks should damn America for continuing to mistreat them.

Obama rejected Wright's divisive statements but still embraced the man who brought him to Christianity, officiated at his wedding, baptized his two daughters and inspired the title of his book "The Audacity of Hope."

"I can no more disown him than I can disown the black community," Obama said. "I can no more disown him than I can my white grandmother – a woman who helped raise me, a woman who sacrificed again and again for me, a woman who loves me as much as she loves anything in this world, but a woman who once confessed her fear of black men who passed by her on the street, and who on more than one occasion has uttered racial or ethnic stereotypes that made me cringe."

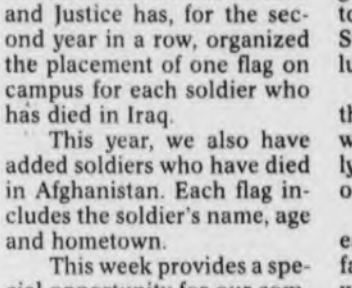
PATERSON SWORN IN AS N.Y.'S 1ST BLACK GOV.

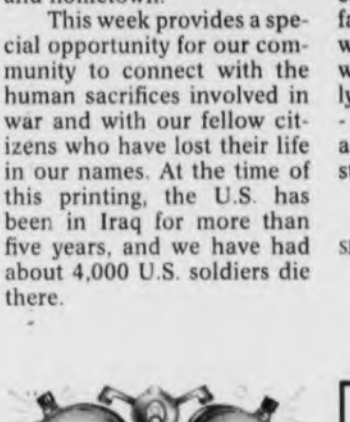
NEW YORK – David Paterson was officially sworn in as New York's governor March 17, becoming the state's first black chief executive and vowing to move past the prostitution scandal that has rocked the state's Capitol.

PATERSON

Paterson, who is legally blind, was interrupted at several times during his address with thunderous applause.

"This transition today is an historic message to the world: That we live by the same values that we profess, and we are a government of laws, not individuals," Paterson said.





Paterson, 53, rose from the lieutenant governor's office after Eliot Spitzer resigned last week amid allegations that he hired a call girl from a high-priced escort service. It was a dramatic fall for Spitzer, who was elected with an overwhelming share of the vote and who had vowed to root out corruption at the Capitol.

March brings Madness to K-State

K-State's tournament run ends short of Sweet Sixteen

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many K-State students might have been lying on a beach for their break, the K-State men's basketball team was busy extending its season.

K-State received a bid to its first NCAA tournament since 1996 and was able to pull off a victory in a NCAA tournament game for the first time since 1988. K-State bowed out of the Big 12 Conference tournament in the quarterfinals to No. 6-seeded Texas A&M, received an 11 seed to the Midwest Regional in Omaha, Neb., and upended No. 6-seeded USC in the first round to become one of 32 to advance to the second round of the tournament.

TEXAS A&M 63, K-STATE 60

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – In a game that saw five ties and six lead changes, K-State wound up on the short end and fell by three to Texas A&M, who it had previously beaten 75-54 at Bramlage Coliseum Jan. 19.

"That's what this time of year is all about," said coach Frank Martin. "This game is pretty much a reflection of what this conference has been like the whole year. ... It's one of those things that at this time of year, somebody's moment of joy is another group of guys' ... misery time."

Freshman forward Michael Beasley had 25 points and nine rebounds, and freshman forward Bill Walker chipped in 10 points. The Wildcats shot 43 percent from the floor, but couldn't overcome 50 percent shooting by the Aggies.

K-State took the lead at the 4:02 mark on a layup by Walker. Texas A&M regained the lead for good at the 3:28 mark on a free throw from senior forward Joseph Jones.

"We obviously didn't perform that well," Walker said. "I'm happy with the way we went out there and fought today. I think we did that today."

K-STATE 80, SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA 67

OMAHA, Neb. – K-State won its first NCAA tournament game in 20 years Thursday when they downed the No. 6-seeded USC by 13 at the Qwest Center.

"[I'm] just extremely excited to be here and represent the Big 12 and for the people of Kansas State that have remained loyal to our program for so long," Martin said.

In a game that was a battle of the freshman, Beasley tallied 23 points and 11 rebounds, his 27th double-double of the season and the 25th time this season he has scored more than 20 points. However, it was Walker who really kept K-State in the game, with an impressive 17-point, first-half performance. He finished with 22 points.

Although USC was the first to score, the Wildcats regained the lead at the 18:54 mark on a three-point shot by Walker, and built on their lead through the first period of play. K-State finished the first half leading by 10, 37-27. K-State finished the game with a 15-point contribution from the Wildcat bench.

In addition to Beasley and Walker, freshman guard Jacob Pullen had 11 points and freshman forward Ron Anderson had 10 points and eight rebounds.

"That's a special group of guys in the locker room to be able to get them, at such a young age ... to be able to focus in and compete at such a high level, it's a credit to those guys and I know it's something that will be with me forever and ever," Martin said.

WISCONSIN 72, K-STATE 55

OMAHA, Neb. – K-State couldn't overcome a powerful attack from No. 3-seeded Wisconsin and the Wildcats fell to the Badgers, who advanced to the Sweet Sixteen to face No. 10 Davidson.

Beasley notched his 28th double-double in the final game of his freshman campaign, notching 23 points and 13 rebounds. Walker was right there with Beasley, adding 18 points to a Wildcat offense that got little production from anywhere else on the roster. Most notably missing from the Wildcats' offensive attack was production from beyond the arc. K-State went 0-for-13 from three-point range. The last time K-State failed to make a three-pointer was 347 games ago against Arkansas-Pine Bluff in 1996.

"Basketball's a unique sport in the sense that you can do a lot of the things that you practice and talk about doing ... and at the end of the day, that ball's got to go through that little orange thing," Martin said. "If it doesn't go through that orange thing, it's hard to win."

Wisconsin and K-State battled through the first part of the first half, causing four ties, but Wisconsin took the lead for good at the 12:22 mark on a three-point shot by sophomore

2007-08 season was memorable

WENDY HAUN

My experience with K-State sports had been limited outside of the revenue sports until this year.

However, after spending the last five months covering the men's basketball team, I can honestly say it has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my journalistic career.

It's not just all of the fun games I got to sit on the sidelines and watch – Kansas, both here and there; Iowa State, Oklahoma, Baylor, the Big 12 Tournament and getting to go to the NCAA Tournament, just to name a few – but because the entire experience of getting to know a really great group of guys has been a blast.

Getting to cover a phenomenal player like Michael Beasley is only second to getting to actually interact with him. He is a nice guy, a comedian-in-training and he always knew how to lighten the mood, along with his teammates Andre Gilbert, Jacob Pullen and Bill Walker.

Clent Stewart is one player I remember watching as a freshman, thinking he was going to be good.

With everything he has gone through this year, it's refreshing to see him on the court, trying to help out his team in any way he can.

Blake Young has brought a new level of intensity to the game. He's gotten rebounds that not even his taller counterparts could get, has been the toughest on the court and is another who underneath the facade is just a big jokester.

The future of this program, I believe, will be Ron Anderson once the Beasley/Walker train leaves K-State. Anderson stepped it up in a significant way in the tournament, most notably when he scored 10 points against USC. He has just gotten better and better all year.

Dominique Sutton brings a pressing inside defense, even after coming back from a mid-season injury.

Yes, we might lose the greatest player to grace the floor of Bramlage Coliseum at the end of this year.

We don't know who will be suiting up for certain, whether we will have David Hoskins back, what talent Frank Martin and his crew plan to bring into Manhattan or whether this talented group of players will be able to avoid injuries.

Though it's difficult to watch this season end, before the conspiracy theories, the rumors about our potential draft picks and next season's starting-five predictions all start, let's sit back and remember all the great things that happened this season. It brought the end to Allen Fieldhouse West, a bid to the NCAA tournament and made K-State a true contender, not only in this conference, but in this nation.

It was a good ride, wasn't it?

History of the men's basketball team in the NCAA Tournament

1948

The team received its first NCAA tournament berth and faced Wyoming in the West semifinals. They advanced to the national tournament and took third place after losing to Holy Cross, 54-60.

1951

K-State's Tex Winter-led team advanced to the NCAA championship after winning the West bracket. They lost to Kentucky, 58-68. Ed Head and Jack Stone were both named to the all-Tournament team.

In this Royal Purple archive photo, the men of the 1964 basketball team pose for a picture. The team was the seventh K-State team to make the NCAA Tournament and they reached the semifinals, where they were eliminated by UCLA, 84-90.

1975

Jack Hartman coached the team to it's third NCAA tournament in four years. The 1975 squad was led by Chuckie Williams, who scored 87 points through three games and was named the east regional's most outstanding player. The team eventually fell in the east regional finals to Syracuse, an 87-95 overtime battle.

1988

No. 4-seeded K-State went down to the wire with Lon Kruger as their coach. After advancing past 13-seeded LaSalle, No. 5 DePaul and No. 1 Purdue, they fell to No. 6-seeded Kansas in the midwest regional finals, 58-71. Kansas went on to win the national championship.

Nelson scores 20, takes K-State to NCAA 2nd round

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. – K-State found a replacement for injured star Kimberly Dietz in Kelsey Nelson and ended the nation's longest winning streak.

The little-used reserve scored a career-high 20 points to help fifth-seeded K-State snap No. 12 Chattanooga's 24-game streak with a 69-59 victory Sunday in the first round of the NCAA tournament. The Wildcats set a tournament record by hitting all 21 free-throw attempts.

"There was no way I could have expected she would explode offensively like she did," coach Deb Patterson said. "In this magnitude game for her to perform at this level was really impressive."

Shalee Lehning added 12 points, eight rebounds and seven assists for Kansas State (22-9), which will play Louisville Tuesday night in the second round of the New Orleans regional.

Laura Hall scored 19 points and Brooke Hand added 15, hitting five 3-pointers for Chattanooga (29-4).

The Lady Mocs hadn't really prepared for Nelson. Who could blame them?

"She hadn't played very much at all and we didn't anticipate this," said Chattanooga coach Wes Moore. "Nelson was waiting for her opportunity and took advantage of it."

Trailing 37-31 early in the second half, K-State went on a 14-4 run. Nelson scored seven straight points during the spurt to give the Wildcats a 45-41 lead with 9:17 left. The junior guard easily surpassed her career highs in points (five) and minutes (13).

Patterson was forced to turn to Nelson after Dietz hurt her knee in the Wildcats' loss to Iowa State in the Big 12 tournament. Dietz had been averaging almost 14 points.

"I don't know if I could be much happier," Nelson said. "I prepared the same way, and knew I could step up if my chance came."

The teams traded baskets until Shanara Hollinquest hit one of two free throws with 3:25 left to cut the deficit to 56-55. The Wildcats scored the next four points to extend the lead to 60-55 on Ashley Sweat's layup. Hall answered with back-to-back baskets to make it 60-59 with 1:22 remaining.

Lehning converted a three-point play to restore the four-point lead with 1:08 to go, and the Wildcats sealed the win from the foul line.

K-State shut down Alex Anderson, the Southern Conference player of the year.

She scored just nine points, nearly eight under her average. She was just 3-for-14 from the field.

After a sluggish start for both teams that saw Chattanooga leading 10-9 midway through the first half, the offense picked up. K-State scored seven straight points, capped by Nelson's 3-pointer, before Hand got hot. She hit three straight 3-pointers for the Lady Mocs to give Chattanooga a 22-18 lead with 6:22 left before break.

The Wildcats closed the half with a 7-2 spurt to take a 25-24 lead.

NEWS AND NOTES

— The left-knee injury Kimberly Dietz suffered during K-State's second-round loss to Iowa State during the Big 12 Conference tournament was confirmed to be a season-ending one, according to a press release from assistant sports information director Randy Peterson. In the release, K-State coach Deb Patterson expressed the team's sadness at losing the first team All-Big 12 selectee before the end of the season.

— K-State was selected to the NCAA tournament for the tenth time in its history, awarded a No. 5 seed and a date with a tough first-round opponent in Bridgeport, Conn. The tournament selection marked the first time both the men's and women's teams made the tournament in the same year since the 1986-87 season.

— Patterson was awarded with more recognition for her coaching accomplishments this season. K-State's coach received her third women's basketball Coaches' Association Region V Coach of the Year award and first since the 2002 and 2003 seasons.

Say goodbye to that pesky backpack, guys. Many men on campus are trading in their bulky backpacks for a more stylish and convenient tote – the messenger bag. Though there are different reasons they think an over-the-shoulder bag is better than one worn on the back, these guys agree they'll never go back to the pack.

Tyler Whetstone, junior in industrial and manufacturing systems engineering, said he is an avid cyclist, and he first bought a messenger bag seven years ago for riding. His bag is called a Chrome bag and is specially designed to be used on a bicycle.

"I'm always riding my bicycle," he said. "It uses the messenger-bag style – as the name implies – and it was designed for bicycle messengers to be able to carry all their stuff around in."

The Chrome bag swings over the left shoulder, fastens with a buckle much like a seat belt and has what Whetstone called a "stability strap" to hold all of his belonging still while he's traveling.

"When you carry a backpack, there's nothing to hold the stuff in your bag in place, so it moves around a lot," he said. "A messenger bag keeps it all still, and it works really well."

Whetstone said he uses his bag to carry his books, pens and pencil, a first-aid kit, wallet, MP3 player, Nalgene bottle and a jar of peanut butter and honey, just to name a few items.

"I carry it everywhere," he said. "It's like my big purse. I can't even use a backpack anymore."

Daniel Graf, senior in marketing, said he also has a messenger bag. However, he said he just has a notebook and any books he needs for class in his bag.

Graf carries the bag just to his classes in place of a backpack because he "got annoyed by backpacks and just wanted something different."

Andy Gigstad, junior in agricultural economics, said he carries his fold-over messenger bag everywhere because the bags are so versatile.

Gigstad first got his bag because his fraternity, FarmHouse, had them custom made.

"I like mine because it doesn't look like a purse or a man-bag," he said. "It just looks like a messenger bag, and it's really handy so I would definitely advise other people to use it."

Gigstad said he either carries his bag across his body, on his shoulder or in one hand, brief case-style.

"It looks more professional than a book bag if I'm going to a meeting, but it still works to take books to class," he said.

If you don't necessarily buy into the messenger bag look, but still want an alternative to a backpack, other carry-all bags can be used as substitutes.

Luke Sims, senior in accounting and finance, said he traded in his backpack for a computer bag after he received one as a Christmas present. Sims said he doesn't have anything against the backpacks, but he always takes his laptop to work and classes and said it would get scraped up if he carried it around on his back.

"It's supposed to be used as a computer bag, but I use it as a book bag, too," he said. "It has its own little compartment for my computer, but it has room for books as well."

So guys, if that loose weight on your back is becoming too much to handle – or too impractical for your lifestyle – try picking up a messenger bag. It will keep your belonging s still and safe on campus while looking more professional at work – a perfect solution for the on-the-go college man.

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Students should improve sex IQ by understanding myths

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dave Thompson said he is surprised at what K-State students don't know about sex.

"I've had students in my class who didn't think STDs existed at K-State because it was located in such a rural area," said. Thompson, instructor of human sexuality.

Annisa Shockey, senior in life sciences, said she agrees with Thompson. As president of Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators, Shockey said on-campus awareness about sex is not high enough.

"Students lack information completely or have misconceptions about sex," she said. "Or, they only have information about moral issues, rather than information coming from a health standpoint."

Thompson said he blames schools and parents for shielding students from health information they need to protect themselves.

"People assume that if they know the mechanics of sex that it's enough," Thompson said, "but there's more to it than that."

DO WOMEN FAKE IT?

Lovers of women might never know for sure if a toe-curling orgasm is authentic, said students and teachers, and they shouldn't always expect an honest answer from the woman in question.

Thompson said women might fake an orgasm to convey satisfaction to their partner.

"Less than one-third of women regularly have intercourse-induced orgasms," Thompson said. "A lot of them are faking."

Raieh Karnowski, senior in anthropology, French and history, also said women might subconsciously exaggerate the way they are feeling in bed to encourage their partners.

"It's hard to tell if the woman is faking or not because female orgasms aren't as definitive as male orgasms," Karnowski said.

DOES SIZE MATTER?

Men who feel insecure about their size don't have many options, short of comparing themselves to other men. And unless they bathe in a public shower, pornography is a man's easiest alternative.

Unfortunately, the industry standard is much more rigid than the norm, which can give men the wrong impression.

"A really common concern for men is the length of their penis," Thompson said. "Erection is the great equalizer. As long as a guy is two inches long, he'll get the job done."

Karnowski said she disagrees.

"I don't think two inches would do it," she said. "But on the other hand, a guy could be really big and not know what to do with it, which is worse."

MISCONCEPTIONS

Students who assume what they know about sex is correct might need to check their facts. Thompson said a common misconception among students is that sexually transmitted diseases cannot be transmitted through oral sex – but they can. Some students believe birth control pills prevent the transference of STDs which is also an incorrect assumption, he said.

"The proper use of condoms is a problem," Shockey said. "People don't know how to put it on, which puts them at risk because the condom could have come in contact with bodily fluids."

Thompson compares using condoms to playing Russian Roulette, citing that the 99 percent effectiveness claim is only applicable when the condoms are inside the factory.

"The typical failure rate of condoms is 12-14 percent, which means one out of every seven or eight condoms used will fail," he said. "It's not safe sex, it's safer sex."

Not knowing how or when to ask for advice has a silencing affect on students who lack the knowledge they need, Thompson said.

"Students don't always know they need counseling if they've been sexually abused, or know what their options are," he said.

At the other end are students who know better and still put themselves at risk.

"It surprises me that even though students know what to do, they choose not to protect themselves," he said.

WEEKLY HOROSCOPE

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 21 - Feb. 19)
The locks, stove, gas or electric wires might not be secure. You should try to elaborate on an idea you have regarding a product or service for the home. Think twice before you pursue an unrealistic endeavor.

PISCES
(Feb. 20 - March 20)
You need activity. This is a turning point. You're eager to learn. Refrain from arguing with your mate.

ARIES
(March 21 - April 20)
Concentrate on yourself or your work. Changes in your domestic scene are evident. Reciprocate by offering helpful hints. Visit friends or relatives who have been confirmed.

TAURUS
(April 21 - May 21)
Relationships will be erratic this week. Though upsetting, changes in your domestic situation will be favorable. Your fight for those less fortunate is not likely to end in sweet victory.

GEMINI
(May 22 - June 21)
Be careful if a friend asks you for advice. Based on your excitement, serious-minded individuals will be more than interested in backing your ideas. You are best to be discreet.

CANCER
(June 22 - July 22)
You should spend your day trying to get things completed at work. Strengthen your position among your peers. Compromising could be on the agenda this week.

LEO
(July 23 - Aug. 22)
You will profit from home improvement projects and real estate deals. Look after financial transactions this week. Don't overspend on luxury items.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23 - Sept. 23)
Nagging has never been something that you could tolerate, and it's once again driving you into a lonely state of affairs. Someone you work with could try to undermine you. Keep an eye on your weight.

LIBRA
(Sept. 24 -Oct. 23)
You should visit a friend or relative who hasn't been well. Be sure to organize events that will keep the children busy. This will not be the day to lend money to friends or family.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 24 - Nov. 22)
Don't let your jealousy be the reason for a decaying relationship. You can't do everything on your own. You might be confused regarding your love life.

SAGITTARIUS
(Nov. 23 - Dec. 21)
Don't rely on others to do your work. Be prepared for an active but rewarding day. Be careful while traveling. Go out shopping this week.

CAPRICORN
(Dec 22. - Jan. 20)
Include friends and family members in your redecorating plans. You can make amends by taking them somewhere special. Someone you work with might be trying to make you look bad.

KSU tennis mixes results over break

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team saw some initial success turn to hard times as they posted a 1-2 record during spring break.

The lone victory came March 14 at Missouri. It was the Wildcats' first win since topping Sam Houston State, 5-2, on Feb. 16. In defeating the Tigers, 5-2, the Wildcats snapped a five-match losing streak and notched five singles wins for the first time since beating St. Louis on Feb. 9.

Senior Viviana Yrureta led the singles effort with her third-straight win. Junior Katerina Kudlackova was also victorious in the No. 3 spot. Freshman Vanessa Cottin, sophomore Natasha Vieira, and senior Olga Klimova also notched wins in the No. 4, 5 and 6 spots, respectively. Freshman Antea Huljev had the only singles loss in the No. 2 spot.

Doubles play was another story for the Wildcats as Klimova and Kudlackova notched the only victory, 8-2, over Mallory Weber and Chrissy Svetlic. Yrureta and Huljev were defeated 8-6 by Sofia Ayala and Kaitlin Dunham. The doubles point was clinched after Jessica Giuggioli and Kaitlyn Ritchie topped Cottin and Vieira, 9-7.

"I didn't think we played all that well," coach Steve Bietau said. "I thought there were things that we could count in the doubles play that disappeared. The good thing is we were able to battle back and get a conference win."

On March 16, the outcome was drastically different as Colorado swept the Wildcats, 7-0. It was the first time the Wildcats had been swept since April 22, 2007, against Texas.

The Buffaloes won all three doubles matches by big margins. In the No. 2 doubles spot, Yrureta and Huljev came the closest to winning dropping their match against Melisa Esposito and Franziska Jendrian, 8-5.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Senior Viviana Yrureta volleys the ball back at her opponent. Yrureta had her third straight singles' victory at No. 1 singles against Missouri March 14.

Bietau said competing was a big issue against the Buffaloes.

"Our problems against Missouri continued against a higher-caliber team," he said. "I feel they may have even gotten worse. I didn't feel like we competed well at all."

When the Wildcats challenged the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 43-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes the results did not improve. The Wildcats hosted Iowa on March 19 at the Washburn Tennis Facility and lost the match, 1-6.

Yrureta notched the only singles victory of the day, defeating Jacqueline Lee, 6-0, 6-4 in the No. 1 singles position. It was Yrureta's fourth win in five matches.

The Wildcats shuffled their doubles line-up pairing Huljev and Cottin together for the first time since the Syracuse match on Feb. 2. The duo notched a 8-7 (9-7) win over Milly Vesleinovic and Lynne Poggensee-Wei. The win improved Huljev and Cottin's record to 2-0. Yrureta and Vieira were also paired together for the first time since the match against Syracuse. They fell to Merel Beelen and Kayla Berry, 8-6. The positive changes in the Wildcats game did not go unnoticed by Bietau.

"We had a more business-like approach to our game," he said. "We competed better on each court, better than we have all season. We hope a doubles line-up switch will help us get going in a positive direction."

K-State is now in the midst of a nine-day break. The Wildcats will return to action Friday against Oklahoma State and Saturday against Oklahoma. Both matches will begin at 1 p.m. and will be at the Washburn Tennis Facility at the Peters Recreation Complex. Despite two straight losses, Bietau's outlook on the season is positive.

"It depends entirely on how we play," Bietau said. "If the Iowa match is an indicator of where we are and where we're going, then we can be pretty solid for the remainder of the year."

3 tracksters named All-American

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team brought six athletes to the NCAA Indoor Championships March 14-15, in Fayetteville, Ark. Half returned with All-American honors.

Juniors Scott Sellers and Loren Groves, along with freshman Rok Derzanic, finished in the top eight of their respective events to be named an All-American.

"It's very difficult to make All-American," said coach Cliff Rovelto. "It's very challenging to get there, let alone finish in the top eight once you're there."

Sellers finished second in the high-jump, earning his third indoor All-American accolade and his fifth overall. Clearing a height of 7-4.50, Sellers was only topped by Dusty Jonas of Nebraska, who leapt over the bar at 7-7.00.

Sellers beat Jonas the previous weekend when the two faced off in the Big 12 Conference Championships. Rovelto said he thinks Sellers jumped well, but would have wanted to jump higher and win the event.

Groves earned her second indoor All-American certificate when she took sixth place in the weight throw. She entered the meet as a No. 4 seed, having recorded a toss of 70-3.00 at the conference meet, but was only able to throw a distance of 68-8.00 in Fayetteville.

Derzanic placed eighth in the men's heptathlon and earned his first All-America award. He recorded a personal best at the meet, amassing a score of 5,645 points in the seven events. He is only the second Wildcat to be named an All-American in the heptathlon.

Teammate and fellow freshman Moritz Cleve also competed in the heptathlon. He entered the meet with a No. 8 seed, but finished 12th overall, just 41 points behind Derzanic.

Rovelto said the freshmen heptathletes' performances were impressive, considering less than 20 freshmen qualified for the meet and only a handful earn All-American honors.

Senior Laci Heller also competed in the weight throw for the Wildcats. She finished tenth with a throw of 64-10.75. Senior Donniece Parrish competed in the NCAA championships for the first time running in the women's 400-meter dash. She clocked a time of 54.09 in the preliminaries to place 15th and failed to qualify for the finals.

Derzanic was the only Wildcat who was able to place higher than seeded entering the meet. Heller entered the meet ranked tenth, and finished in the same position. The other four athletes finished lower than they were ranked entering the meet.

The men were able to secure nine points in the meet, eight from Sellers and one from Derzanic, to finish 27th as a team. The women's only scoring came from Groves. Her three points earned the team a 53rd place finish.

After wrapping up the indoor season at nationals, the Wildcats got into the swing of outdoor season Friday and Saturday when they competed in Arizona State's Baldy Castillo Invitational in Tempe, Ariz.

More than 20 athletes from both the men's and women's teams traveled to the invitational, and combined for seven NCAA regional-qualifying marks.

guard Jason Bohannon. K-State also faced foul trouble that carried on into the second half, which resulted in Walker fouling out at the 2:49 mark.

Leading Wisconsin's offense was sophomore guard Trevon Hughes, who had 25 points, as well as senior guard Michael Flowers, who contributed 15.

The loss marked the end of the Wildcats' season. The wait begins to find out who will comprise the K-State bench next season. After the game, Beasley refused to comment to a reporter who asked him about his future plans.

"You're asking me these questions right after a big loss," he said. "I have had no time at all to think about my decision. And I'm not going to start thinking or contemplating on what I'm going to do for another couple of weeks."

of 14 targets on an M-240 Bravo machine gun.

Because the four foreign weapons the soldiers are trained on are so similar to their American models, the foreign weapons training calls for less practice.

Snow, who said he was training for the second time, took soldiers step-by-step through how to lock and load foreign machine guns, rifles and snipers.

He also said the weapons were simple to operate and some are almost identical to their American machine models.

"For a lot of these people," Lewis said, "this is their first time ever shooting, and it'll probably be their last." Lewis said he has occasionally come across weapon malfunctions while training, but said there haven't been any serious safety problems on the range. When the red flag's up, people know to be cautious.

MiTTs train on a rigorous schedule, working from dawn until dusk everyday, typically for a month, before they are deployed to their designated destinations.

The program, Snow said, has been at Fort Riley for just over a year.

NEW ORLEANS | Dogs, cats benefit from help

The second group spent the week helping rebuild homes that were destroyed and those that were not fixed properly.

The third group spent the week recycling paint from the different areas around the city.

Mariam Bahadori, junior in psychology, also volunteered at the animal shelter. Bahadori and other students helped clean the shelter.

They also helped feed the animals and walk the dogs.

It was beneficial to the dogs to have the student volunteers because some of the dogs haven't been out of their kennels in two months, Bahadori said.

"If felt good that we could take our time and help people that really needed it," Bahadori said.

resident, lost her home in the F-5 tornado on May 4, 2007.

Helwig had lived out of a FEMA trailer since the destruction of her town. The group replaced Helwig's roof, built inside walls and reconstructed her one-car garage. Each day, Helwig visited the construction site and added a new story about her tornado experience.

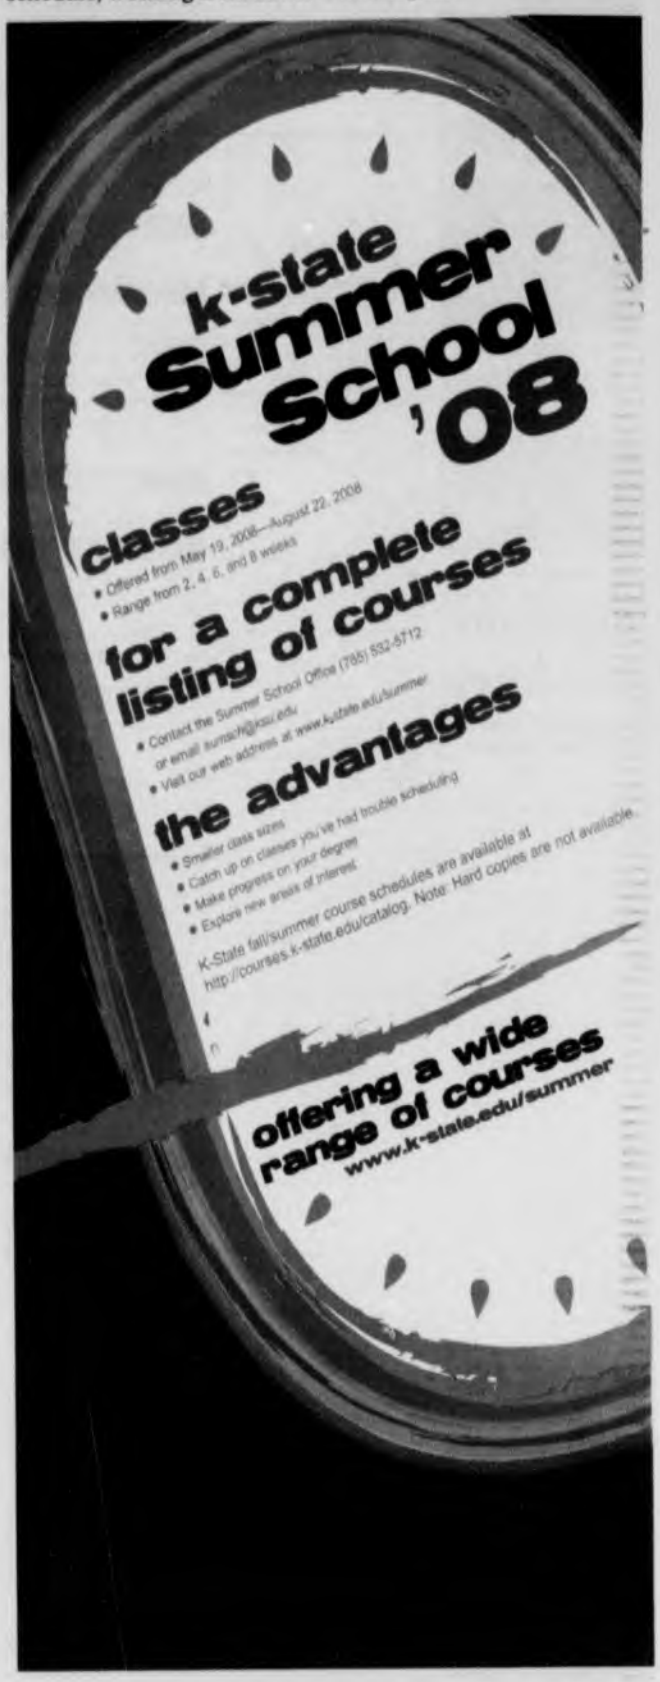
"Elma is a sweet lady. She is very deserving," said Mary Cox, freshman in financial planning. "Building the house for her was a way to help her do her ministry of her cinnamon rolls she bakes for people. So it was just another way to help someone who helps others."

Of all the stories Cox heard throughout the week, she witnessed her own Greensburg memory. Over the week, the town's lone water tower was set into place with a crane.

"That was something that seemed pretty significant in a small town," Holton said. "If I was a resident of Greensburg and saw the water tower go up you would say, 'Wow we are finally moving along.'"

Carl Zerweck, director of Disciples Volunteering, said seeing the water tower go up is another visible sign that the town of Greensburg is coming back to life and that volunteers really can make a difference in this situation.

"The group from Kansas State was there during the week when there was 350 plus volunteers working in town," Zerweck said. "Which presented a big work management dilemma. One of the things I appreciated about the K-State group was that they were patient, flexible and worked hard for five days under challenging work and weather conditions."

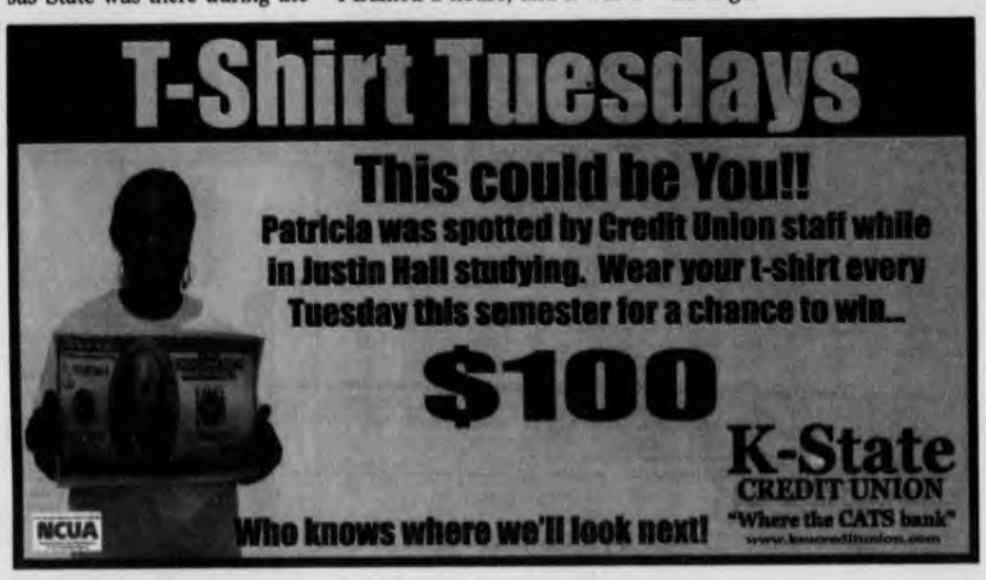


Third-time alternative spring break participant, Sam Coberly, said she likes to see the amount of work volunteers can get done in one week. Coberly traveled to the Gulf Coast, Mexico and now Greensburg.

"When we got there, it was just four outside walls," said Coberly, senior in anthropology. "Now, it actually looks like a house. This was the first time I framed a house, and it was a new experience."

As the volunteers loaded the van Friday to head home, they reflected on their favorite memories. Holton said nail guns still scare her, though she used one the entire week.

K-State campus pastor David Jones said the students really worked well together and enjoyed a memorable week.



"You heard about Greensburg on the television, but it really hit me on the way from Pratt to Greensburg," Holton said. "The first thing you notice is the destroyed trees. Looking at the old pictures and seeing how everything was an absolute mess even now it's an absolute mess they still have come so far. They still have so far to go."

Weekend vehicle fire might be arson

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A vehicle fire early Sunday morning might have been arson, according to Riley County Police Department reports.

RCPD Capt. Hank Nelson said at about 1 a.m. Sunday, the RCPD and the Manhattan Fire Department were dispatched to 1524 Fair Lane on a report of a fire. Upon arriving on the scene, officers found a 1996 Audi engulfed in flames. MFD crews extinguished the fire.

The cause of the fire is undetermined according to the MFD report, but Nelson said there is evidence suggesting the fire was deliberately set.

The estimated loss for the vehicle and its contents was $37,000 according to the MFD report.

The fire also damaged the side of a nearby apartment building. Vinyl siding melted off the structure, causing $5,000 in damages, according to MFD reports.

Nelson said there were no suspects in the case at press time. No injuries were reported.

XBOX 360 stolen from Haymaker

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An Xbox 360, nine games and several game cases and Playstation controllers were stolen from a room in Haymaker Hall during spring break, according to a K-State Police report.

"[Theft] happens more often in the dorms than most places on campus," said Capt. Richard Herrman. "It's one of our more common criminal offenses on campus."

Despite how common theft is in residential halls, it does not happen often at Haymaker.

Brian Jaworski, residence life coordinator for Haymaker Hall, said the theft was the first to be documented at Haymaker. He said underage drinking is the issue Haymaker residential assistants deal with most.

Herrman said most of the time property is stolen from unlocked rooms or vehicles, and he suggested that students always lock their doors.

The National Crime Information System is a server that stores information about stolen property from across the United States. If victims have the serial numbers of their stolen items recorded, the numbers can be entered into the system and searchers can find out if the stolen property was pawned.

"[Students should] record all their serial numbers somewhere so we can trace them back, but the best thing to do is just lock the door," Herrman said. "We seldom, if ever, have a broken door from somebody breaking in. Most people just walk in and help themselves."

Capt. Donald Stubbings of K-State Police agreed and said the majority of calls to the residence halls are property theft from unsecured rooms.

"Too often roommates rely on each other to lock the door," he said.

His advice was to be vigilant about making sure doors are locked for short periods of time, even when residents go to take short showers.

Bill Wingfield won Accompanist of the Year for the West Central region of the National Association of Teachers of Singing in November 2007. He said accompanying often requires a risk-taking mentality because of its high-pressure demands.

Piano Man

Staff accompanist composes, records jazz in spare time

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bill Wingfield's McCain Auditorium studio is unlike most faculty members' offices.

Wingfield's instrument – the piano – sits toward a back corner with empty space surrounding it. Students and faculty members gather around the piano each day. A slim man dressed in dark pants, a dressy jacket and wire-rimmed glasses, Wingfield, performs piece after piece and serves as the musical vehicle as he accompanies students and faculty members each day.

Since 1996, Wingfield has served as a full-time staff accompanist for K-State's Department of Music. Throughout his professional career, he has served as an opera coach, performed with country musical groups and recorded a jazz album.

MULTIPLE MUSICAL TALENTS

On his first day of Beginning Italian at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y. in the early 1970s, Wingfield and his classmates waited for their teacher. About 10 other students – all singers – waited with Wingfield. As the only pianist in the class, they asked him if he wanted to be a coach.

In opera, a coach is a person who helps the singers learn their roles, Wingfield said. Coaches play the orchestra parts on piano and give suggestions on pronunciation and musical styles.

"I didn't know such a job existed," Wingfield said. "That sounded like something I would really love to do. From that moment on, I decided I wanted to be in opera."

With several years of German in high school, Wingfield also took French as an undergraduate. After he graduated from Eastman, Wingfield got a job with an opera company in Chautauqua, N.Y. He moved with his first wife to New York City and worked for five years as an opera coach.

Though he sometimes thinks about his New York experiences while watching an opera, Wingfield said he loves Manhattan's small-town atmosphere.

"I feel much more at home here," Wingfield said. "I love New York, but I'm glad I'm here. I have no desire to move back to New York; I enjoy living here."

In the early 1980s, Wingfield moved to Manhattan and received a master's degree in piano performance in 1983 from K-State. As he pursued his master's degree, Wingfield said he thought about a career in popular music as a songwriter.

Wingfield and his family moved to Nashville, Tenn., where he pursued a country music career. After moving back to Manhattan, Wingfield said he worked as a

Fluid-intake needs differ between patients with common cold, flu

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People who are ill with the flu or common cold should drink different types of liquids and maintain their hydration level, said K-State nutrition and health education faculty members.

Water or 100 percent fruit juices should be consumed if someone has a common cold, said Mary Meck Higgins, associate professor in the Department of Human Nutrition and nutrition specialist with K-State Research and Extension. Fluids are necessary because people lose fluids through sneezing and frequently blowing their noses, Higgins said.

Chicken soup and other broth-based soups also are recommended to stay hydrated when ill with a common cold, Higgins said. Warm milk and warm tea also will soothe sore throats, she said.

"You're not looking for carbonated beverages because you're looking to stay hydrated and recover, so you're looking for something more nourishing," Higgins said.

With flu and nausea, Higgins said carbonated beverages and ginger ale soothe stomachs.

"Carbonated beverages are what I recommend if you're having trouble with nausea or vomiting," Higgins said. "For every other illness where you are trying to quench your thirst or stay hydrated, I wouldn't recommend carbonated beverages."

All fluids count toward water intake, though, Higgins said. If sick people mostly consume juices like milk, soup, juice and tea, an increase in water consumption is unnecessary, she said.

"Plain water, if they can take that, is a wonderful way to re-hydrate and stay hydrated," Higgins said. "If they're really thirsty and don't like plain water, they can mix water with 100 percent juice."

Thirst occurs when people have lost 0.8 percent to 2 percent of their body weight, according to "Liquid Assets: The Value of Fluids to Your Health" by Barbara L. Ames. Ames is a Montgomery (Kan.) County family and consumer sciences agent for K-State Research and Extension.

According to the article, the easiest way to tell if a person is dehydrated is urine color and quantity. If the urine is dark, the body needs more fluids. Clear urine indicates a normal water balance in the human body, according to the article.

For those with diabetes who have the flu or another illness, Higgins said their blood sugar generally increases because of the stress with the illness. A blood sugar increase also increases thirst in those with diabetes, she said.

"I would caution that if someone with diabetes is really thirsty, they should monitor their blood sugar," Higgins said. "If they don't already have a plan for how to manage sick days, they should contact their doctor and develop a plan."

With most illnesses, people should maintain hydration with any fluid they can intake, including hot teas, iced teas and sugared drinks, said Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene Health Center. While hydration is more important than calorie content to stay hydrated when ill, Kennedy said alcohol should not be consumed.

"When somebody is sick, anything to avoid dehydration is necessary," Kennedy said. "Whenever you're sick, you still want to maintain

BEGINNING OF SPRING QUIZ

1. According the poet Alfred Lord Tennyson, "In the Spring, a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of" what?
A. Thirsty Thursday at McCormick Field
B. Love
C. The fairer sex
D. A new Troy-Bilt 17.5 horsepower 42-inch cut riding lawnmower

2. Why do we have daylight saving time?
A. To help offset loss of annual time due to gravitational forces
B. Because the airline industry, at its onset, argued more people would travel with more daylight
C. So we can enjoy more sun in the evenings
D. Farmers lobbied Congress in 1922, saying the time change would help their work in fields

3. One state in the Eastern Time Zone goes a little haywire with the arrival of daylight saving time. Of the state's 92 counties, 77 do not use daylight saving, two counties do use daylight saving and the rest set their clocks to the Central Time Zone. Which time-confused state is this?
A. Indiana
B. Maine
C. Michigan
D. North Carolina

4. The exact origin of April Fools' Day is uncertain, but which of the following is a possible beginning of this prankster's holiday?
A. In medieval times, much maligned village idiots and drunks were gathered together and made kings for the day. The ritual served as a way for the community to atone for wrongdoing and celebrate spring's coming with rebirth.
B. Ancient cultures celebrated New Year's Day on April 1. When Pope Gregory XIII ordered a new calendar in 1582, several countries resisted changing New Year's Day to Jan. 1. As people began making fun of the traditionalists, April Fools' Day was born.
C. Marie Antoinette uttered her famous quote, "Let them eat cake," on April 1, fanning flames of the French Revolution. Afterward, peasants mocked the monarchy by creating All Fools' Day.
D. The tradition traces back to Egypt and young King Tutankhamun. The boy king demanded a massive tomb upon his ascension to the throne. When he needed it at a tender age and in the spring, his subjects celebrated him with a day of mockery.

5. Who declared "April is the cruelest month"?
A. Poet T.S. Eliot in The Waste Land
B. Attributed to an unknown American POW as the Bataan Death March of World War II began that month
C. Franklin D. Roosevelt, after being told Adolph Hitler was born in April
D. William Shakespeare in A Midsummer Night's Dream

6. What is the origin of the Easter bunny?
A. The long-defunct candy company, Haver's of England, created the chocolate bunny as a marketing ploy to boost sales after Valentine's Day.
B. It traces to early literature in missionary communities. Missionaries sought a gentle, understandable character that could explain the birth of Christ to children in countries abroad.
C. The Catholic tradition in Spain held that hunters should bring a pure, white hare to the Easter banquet in celebration of Christ's resurrection. If they were successful, the home would be doubly blessed that spring.
D. The pagan goddess of spring, Eostre, was accompanied by a hare. The fertile animal represented the rebirth of spring, and became the Easter bunny.

CITY COMMISSION

City will be host to work session

Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission will have a work session tonight to discuss how the city will pay for the $182 million downtown redevelopment project under construction. According to the agenda, $35 million of the $182 million will be paid by the city.

STRAWN

Commissioner Bob Strawn said the money will come from a wide variety of sources including sales tax, city and county school tax and property tax.

According to the agenda, the mill-levy impact will peak in 2012 at 4.969 mills and slowly decline each year for 20 years. The city property tax right now is at 31 mills, Strawn said.

"What we are doing will add about four mills, which is about 13 percent added to all city wide property taxes," Strawn said. "The property taxes are going to have a heavy contribution to the $35 million."

A 0.5-percent sales tax will be added to all sales within the redevelopment area. This additional sales tax only will be applied to businesses within the redevelopment project area. The north area, according to the agenda, covers all businesses from Bluemont Avenue to Leavenworth Street and from Fourth Street to Tuttle Creek Boulevard. The south-end area encompasses Pierre Street to Fort Riley Boulevard and Fourth Street to Fort Riley Boulevard.

State sales tax revenues will cover approximately $50 million of the redevelopment project. Dial Realty will be responsible for approximately $3.6 million of the redevelopment cost. Bernie Hayen, director of finance, and Jason Hilgers, assistant city manager, will present the proposed itemizations to the city council, according to the agenda.

"This is an attempt to understand how the city is going to pay for the $187 million project," Strawn said.

The work session begins at 5 tonight in the commission room at City Hall. The meeting also will be broadcast on local cable Channel 3.

Alumnus has come long way from trashman to lawyer

Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State alumnus Keen Umbehr demonstrates that with a little taith, a good family support system and not backing down, anything is possible.

Keen, a lawyer and resident of Alma, Kan., had a business contract for hauling trash with Wabaunsee County Commissioners. From 1981 to 1991, he served six of the seven towns in the county.

"He was a one-man business," said Keen Umbehr II, his son and a senior in psychology.

While he was hauling trash, Keen managed to find time to write a weekly newspaper column called "My Perspective." He discussed issues pertaining to what he believed was right and wrong concerning the Wabaunsee County Commissioners.

The commissioners retaliated to Keen's articles with a threat.

"They told me if I stopped writing and publishing my articles, that I could keep my contract," Keen said.

Keen didn't stop writing or publishing his articles, and that upset the commissioners.

"It's never a great business plan to attack the person that gives you a check," Umbehr said.

The commissioners decided to terminate Keen's contract for hauling trash. He decided to take his case to court, fighting for his First Amendment rights.

"It was a real David and Goliath fight," said his wife, Eileen Umbehr, an author and homemaker.

The first round in Federal District Court was dismissed but that didn't stop Keen.

The case went to the U.S Supreme Court.

On June 28, 1998, the Supreme Court handed down a 7-2 decision in a favor ruling, stating the First Amendment protects independent contractors from termination of contracts in retaliation for their exercise of freedom of speech.

"It was a fight to the finish," Eileen said.

Keen said he thought he had won his battle but that there was more for him to do.

He decided he wanted to accomplish something he had never attempted: He sold his trash business and headed to college.

Keen graduated from K-State cum laude in three years and went on to law school. Today, he is an attorney with a private practice in Alma and Topeka.

Throughout his efforts to get an education and pursue a career in law, Keen Umbehr's wife Eileen (pictured left) supported him and wrote a book about his achievements.

COURTESY PHOTO

Eileen said she was so proud of her husband's accomplishments she decided to write a book about it titled "Small Town Showdown."

Keen has four children – all attending K-State. All the Umbehrs' children are proud of their father's achievements and use it as motivation to achieve their goals, Keen Umbehr II said.

"Seeing all he did with the transition from being a trash man to going to college was very motivating," he said.

K-State anti-poverty chapter competes in campus challenge

By David L. Griffin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's chapter of the ONE campaign, a nationwide movement to raise awareness of poverty around the world, is ranked seven in the top-10 schools participating with active ONE chapters.

WEBB

In K-State's efforts to win the ONE Campus Challenge, David Westfall, president of K-State's ONE Campaign chapter and graduate student in sociology, has organized the campus event "ONE Day to Fight Poverty."

The organization will be taking donations from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today in Bosco Student Plaza. At 5, there will be a benefit dinner and entertainment in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Keynote speaker Judge Tommy Webb will speak at 7 p.m.

Westfall said the event is meant to be a reflection of the past few months working to compete with more than 1,400 universities across the country to get students involved in the anti-poverty effort.

The ONE Challenge gives the top-10 schools $1,000 to set up an event on their campus in 30 days and document the day's activities through petitions, video and pictures.

The events will be judged by members of www.one.org and voted on by students who are part of the ONE Campaign. The winner of the ONE Challenge will have a top recording artist perform on their campus.

"K-State as ONE" is a movement that was sparked by a simple challenge from Westfall last semester: "One billion people live on less then $1 a day, respond to that."

Westfall said that in two months, K-State's chapter went from 135th in the ONE Challenge to the No.-seven school out of several thousand schools participating.

"I think it's exciting because we've just started, and I think this is exciting because this is part of 2.5 million Americans, and people are signing up every day; this is a social movement," Westfall said.

To assist the organization with their event, a ONE advisor from Hollywood has been sent to K-State.

Catherine Farrell, a ONE Campus Challenge volunteer and the chapter's adviser, arrived in Manhattan Monday and said that right away she noticed the members are very organized, and she also said she was excited about the activities the students are getting involved in.

"This chapter has done an amazing job getting people to sign up and they've many, many students, and they're making a great impact," Farrell said.

Westfall compared this movement to other movements created by past generations, and said the ONE Campaign has surpassed those movements because people all over the world will be affected by it.

"World War II, they call the greatest generation; we've had the women's rights movement, we've had the Civil Rights Movement, we've had all these movements – this one is bigger," he said.

This movement addresses everything from hunger to sustainable development; starvation to global warming.

According to K-State Media Relations, K-State's Student Governing Association has passed a resolution proclaiming K-State to be a ONE campus, supporting the efforts to fight poverty.

The Mayor of Manhattan, Tom Phillips, made a similar proclamation for the city.

"In all honesty, this movement is going to touch every single person on this planet, either directly or indirectly, and I think that's what's so exciting, to see how it's progressing here," Westfall said.

SCHEDULE

9:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. There will be interactive demonstrations and student organization tables accepting donations in Bosco Plaza.
5 p.m. - 6:30 p.m. Dinner and live music from Kula Voyage in Union Ballroom. Event is free to all. The group will be accepting donations during this time also.

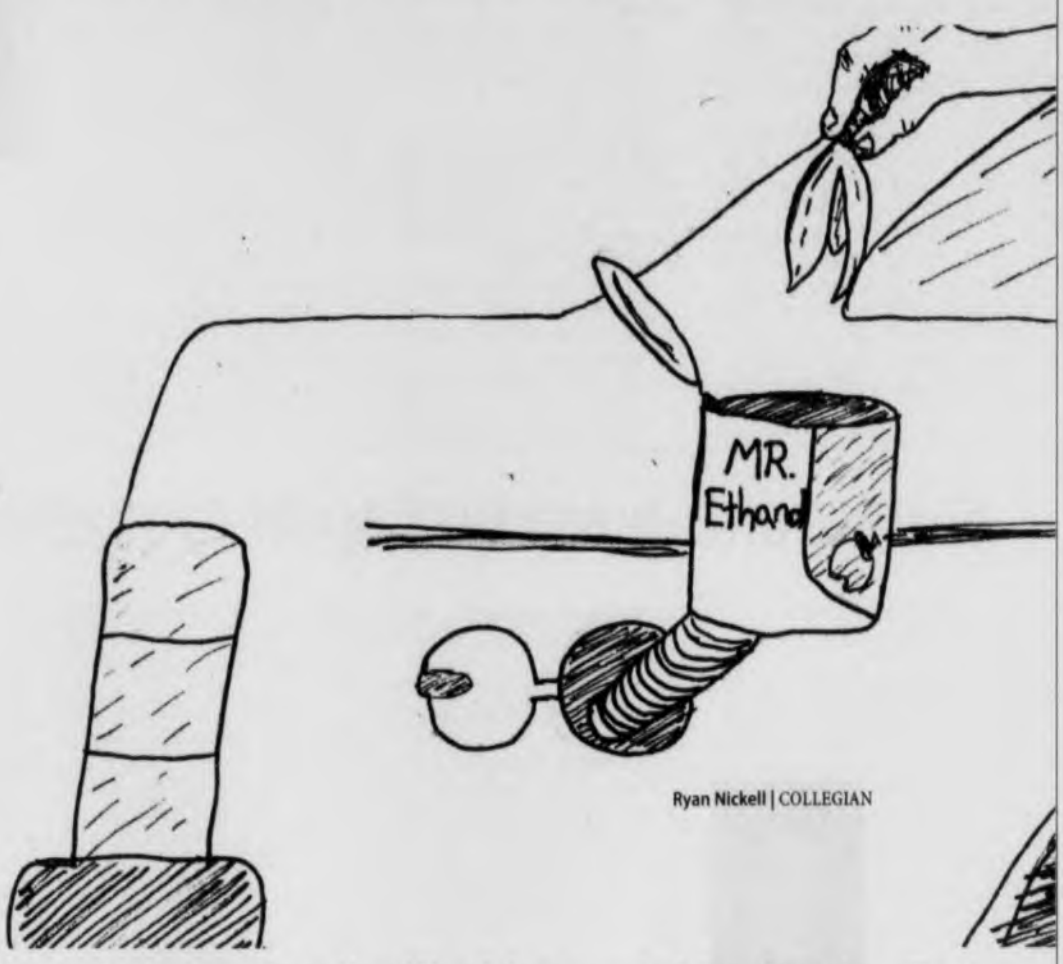
The future of fuel

Ethanol has limitations now, but prospects exciting

JOE VOSSEN

With crude oil prices at record levels and global temperatures inching upward, the world continues its hunt for a sustainable, clean and cheap alternative to petroleum. Ethanol has been heralded as the fuel of the future, but its current condition is far from promising – or green.

Ethanol diverts starch-based plants from food production to fuel production. The UN's World Food Programme estimates 25,000 people around the world die of hunger and related illnesses each day – more than AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis combined.



Corn ethanol burns 22 percent cleaner than gasoline, but the energy burned growing, producing and transporting the fuel might release just as much carbon emission as oil.

The United States cannot grow enough corn to feed us, our animals, our trading partners and our automobile engines. A U.S. Department of Agriculture study projected that even if the entire U.S. corn crop was converted to ethanol, it would replace only 12 percent of our annual gasoline consumption.

The calculus for corn ethanol does not add up. Few can argue our choice of inputs and our production methods leave room for improvement. The forecast for ethanol's future, however, is bright.

Corn kernels are not the only way to manufacture ethyl alcohol. Research on alternative pathways to ethanol production is encouraging; one of the most exciting areas is the development of cellulose.

The cell walls of plants are composed of cellulose – tough chains of sugar molecules that give plants strength and enable them to stand up. Scientists are racing to find ways to break up those molecules and ferment the sugar. The resulting ethanol could be created from almost any plant by-product on the globe: corn stalks and other agricultural residues, forestry wastes like sawdust or wood chips, household garbage, algae and native grasses like switchgrass or buffalo grass.

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

The process is harder than it sounds. Unlike the sugar in corn kernels, which is broken down relatively easily, cellulose is more complex. When the secret to unlocking cellulose from plant by-products is found – a discovery that would end the competition between food and fuel – a revolutionary new age in energy and agriculture could begin.

The millions of bushels of corn directed toward ethanol production would be returned to the food supply; today's agricultural leftovers (husks, stalks or by-products of common crops) would be harvested as tomorrow's energy source. Farmers of the United States and the world would benefit from two uses of their crops: food and fuel.

Cellulosic ethanol also could be created from prairie grasses native to Kansas. The National Resources Conservation Service says there are 10 million acres of tallgrass prairie remaining in Kansas, which is one-fifth of the state's total area. If the science behind converting cellulose to ethanol is perfected, the economic windfall to Kansas farmers and ranchers would be staggering. If there is one certainty in all the guesswork surrounding ethanol, it is that biofuels are changing the face of agriculture forever.

"If I take a look at the major paradigm shifts of agriculture through history, the first one was the domestication of animals and plants," said Fred Cholick, dean of the College of Agriculture. "The second shift was switching from animal power to mechanical power – the tractor. The third shift is this relationship between our food, our feed, our fuel and our environment. It'll have as much influence on agriculture as the last two."

It is easy to be discouraged by ethanol's current shortcomings; the immediate limitations of the fuel do not make it economically feasible to replace oil as our fuel of choice. The biofuel technologies coming down the pipeline, however, are reason enough to give us hope.

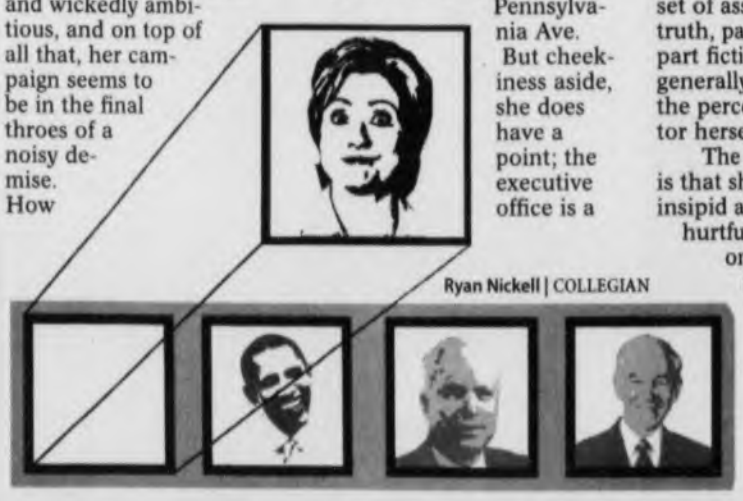
Clinton's 'experience' niche could hinder campaign

ADAM PHAM

As Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., herself often has noted, she is one of the most scrutinized and dissected figures in modern politics.

I haven't the impartiality to evaluate her without prejudice, the scholarship to provide genuinely original historical insight or the terseness to do so in only a few hundred words. To sidestep her sweeping biography entirely, I shall say only that of all the candidates, her historic legacy already has been most firmly secured.

She's famous, clever and wickedly ambitious, and on top of all that, her campaign seems to be in the final throes of a noisy demise. How could one possibly lead off a discussion of the election with anyone else?



She has carved out a niche for herself as the "experience" candidate – rhetoric that has been related as similar to Yoko Ono claiming she knows what it's like to be a Beatle. None of the major candidates, of course, ever have had any significant executive experience.

There are more than a few examples of individuals who, without any executive experience whatsoever, have presided admirably at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

But cheekiness aside, she does have a point; the executive office is a very different environment than that of the legislature, and eight years of immersion in the former – even if only by proxy – does certainly suggest that her baptism won't be quite as fiery.

(A bitter partisan might add, "Hillary Clinton does know where the bodies are buried," but I wouldn't.)

Clinton also drags alongside her the heaviest set of burdens. She is widely perceived as a conniving carpet-bagger with no sense of humor and a titanic sense of entitlement – an eclectic set of assertions that are part truth, part exaggeration and part fiction entirely. They generally betray more about the perceiver than the senator herself.

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

The most grievous insult is that she is "unlikable," an insipid ad hominem whose hurtfulness is matched only by its vagueness, and the most dimwitted insult is that she is "unelectable," a circular contention that inexplicably has managed to become a piece of its own evidence.

And this is not even to mention the effect of Clinton's most fervent and visible surrogate, mixed as it might have been.

But most importantly, will she win?

It doesn't seem likely. The circumstances surrounding the Democratic nomination are grim. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., has an almost insurmountable lead in both pledged delegates and the popular vote.

Though Clinton maintains a lead of her own in unpledged delegates, these so-called "superdelegates" are party elites who are unlikely to directly contravene the wishes of their own constituents.

Meanwhile, Florida and Michigan, because of deliberate procedural violations, had their pledged delegates removed from the contest months ago, and their reinstatement would have restored hundreds of additional delegates and been a boon for her. However, over the last week, both nullifications seem to have been reaffirmed.

This leaves less than 600 pledged delegates remaining until the convention, most of them split relatively evenly between the two candidates. Even under the most absurdly generous scenario, she is unlikely to ever regain the lead.

The most suitable description for the situation comes from the nomenclature of the sports world: to secure the nomination, she would have to "back in" to the presidency because of a critical Obama misstep, and one on the order of infamous Spitzer prostitute Ashley Alexandra Dupré, not the Rev. Jeremiah Wright.

But as unlikely as a victory might be, we should have learned, à la Paul Tsongas, that one mustn't ever make the mistake of discounting the Clintons.

TO THE POINT

Students should be wary of dorm theft

For many students, college is the first time privacy is at a minimum. Students who live in the residence halls, a greek house, apartment or house have to share living areas, sleeping quarters and/or a bathroom. While many students adapt to the college lifestyle, there are certain risks associated with less privacy, including theft.

Rarely do students worry about property being stolen from their homes, but when they live in residence halls, the concern for theft is much greater, and for good reason. Once students become comfortable with those living around them, they let their guard down. Students start to leave their rooms unlocked because they trust those they live with, but for some this leads to property being stolen.

It is unfortunate that students have to worry about their belongings while at school, but it is a sad reality. Security is a high priority for the Housing and Dining Services, and the university has done well to see that students and their property remain safe. The best way to prevent theft from a room or house is to lock your doors.

Even if you live on a floor with a bunch of friends, caution should be taken to make sure everything and everyone in a room is safe. Besides locking doors, students should take the time to write down the serial numbers of property that might be valuable. This will make anything that is stolen easier to find. Or students could leave anything worth stealing at home.

Preventing theft should be a priority for everyone on campus, and unless students take preventative measures, theft will become more common.

NISTAC, Research Foundation help researchers build businesses

Joslyn Brown
COLLEGIAN
The NISTAC moved into a new building almost a year ago that allows for much more office and research space.

Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the mid-1980s, Ken Klabunde, professor of chemistry, tried to start his own business based on his nanoparticle technology research, which focused on the ability of microscopic particles to combat biological threats.

He failed, but 10 years later Klabunde tried again with the help of K-State's Mid-America Commercialization Corporation, which helped him receive licenses for his research patents as well as establish business contacts and laboratory space to start a business. Now Klabunde's business, NanoScale Corporation, is prospering.

MACC's name was changed to the National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition and Commercialization in 2004 and still handles cases like Klabunde's.

NISTAC president Kent Glasscock said the institution helps license technologies and start businesses based on research breakthroughs at K-State.

Before NISTAC works with this research, people who want to pursue licensing rights or their own business usually go to the K-State Research Foundation, which helps them patent their technologies.

Marcia Molina, vice president for the K-State Research Foundation, said the foundation, a nonprofit organization separate from the university, has a contract with the university to manage all intellectual property produced at K-State. When a professor has a new finding in stem-cell research or feed sciences, Molina said they must come to the foundation, which will seek patents based on the invention's ability to succeed in the business world.

"It could be the best idea in the world, but if there's not a significant commercial market for it, it doesn't make sense for us to patent it," Molina said.

Molina said K-State researchers disclose between 35-40 inventions a year. She said the foundation pursues patents on half of those, while only half – or about 10 – actually receive patents.

After the research findings are patented, researchers then turn to NISTAC to license these patents and start a business. Glasscock said he and other NISTAC employers evaluate the invention's business prospects, its competing technologies, market trends, market size and other factors of a business, and he also connects the inventions and researchers with national business representatives.

"We have a broad array of activities, all of which in the end are designed to facilitate technology-based economic development and to benefit Kansas State University," Glasscock said.

NISTAC also receives patents that are donated by larger corporations that do not want to pursue the business capabilities of the patents. Businesses like NutriJoy, which produces healthy food and drink product and was sold to Coca-Cola in January, are developed at specific offices and labs in the NISTAC buildings until they can function as businesses on their own.

Klabunde said NISTAC started to boom when it initially received these donations.

"NISTAC has grown out of MACC primarily because they have been able to go out and get patents outside of the university, but still encourage professors to get patents," Klabunde said.

The NISTAC moved into a new building almost a year ago that is about twice the size of the old building. Glasscock said the building allows for much more office and research space for K-State inventions and the donated patents. He also said it gives the institute a more professional atmosphere.

"We look more professional now, and we have facilities that major American companies can come visit and have a feeling we are credible and potentially get partners for them," he said.

Glasscock said most of the approximately 20 businesses that NISTAC helps are still K-State inventions, of which two-thirds are biologically based.

Glasscock said the university, K-State Research Foundation, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the City of Manhattan have started to work much more closely to build on agriculture and biological research at K-State that could benefit the whole region.

"These are areas that we think constitute areas of strength for Kansas State University, but also represent real economic opportunities for the community and for the partners," he said.

Inclusion Week to celebrate diversity, facets on campus

Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Inclusion Week, dedicated to showcasing various facets of K-State's student body, started Monday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The week, which was established to celebrate K-State's diversity, began with a preview of the final event of the week, the Yard Step Show at 5 p.m. Friday in the Union's Forum Hall.

Rayonna Thomas, junior in apparel marketing and member of Delta Sigma Theta, a historically black sorority, said the show was meant to give passersby a taste of what was going on Friday.

"We did the preview show in hopes that people will see the show and want to go and see the real thing on Friday night," Thomas said.

Participating historically black fraternities and sororities will use Friday to showcase their stepping skills and recruit area high school students who have been invited to get a taste of what multicultural greek life is like.

"We're reaching out to the Manhattan and Junction City high-school students to raise awareness about the [greek] houses," Thomas said.

The College of Business also will lead two seminars the students will attend, one on financial planning and the other on different majors offered within the college, Thomas said.

One of the week's highlights is a visit Wednesday from Nate Parker, Hollywood actor from the movie "The Great Debaters." Parker will be on campus giving a speech, said Beth Bailey, assistant director of the K-State Student Union.

Alex Wilson, senior in psychology and co-chair for the Union Programing Council, first came up with the idea to have Inclusion Week on campus. She said the week was designed to give students a chance to teach each other about diversity.

Wilson also said she is excited about all of the week's activities, but is especially looking forward to Parker's speech on Wednesday..

"I'm excited about everything," Wilson said. "[The week is a] great way to get students involved and teaching others about diversity."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Full Nelson

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Junior guard Kelsey Nelson fights for a loose ball during Sunday's game against Chattanooga. Nelson had a career-high 20 points in the first-round game, after having scored just 23 points during the entire duration of the regular season.

Cats will need surprise performances from other players to stay in Dance

K-State moved to the second round of the NCAA tournament Sunday, thanks in part to the 20-point performance from junior Kelsey Nelson.

JOEL JELLISON

Nelson filled the void left by Kimberly Dietz's season-ending knee injury during the Big 12 Conference tournament by recording career highs in minutes and points, among many other categories. Going into the contest with Chattanooga, Nelson had scored 23 points all season long.

Though she had played very few minutes this season, Nelson was embraced by K-State fans for being a local athlete and the sister of K-State football's wide receiver Jordy Nelson. Still, Kelsey's role with the team was extremely limited until her explosive performance in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

The junior stepped out of the shadow of her brother's football season Sunday and made a name for herself. It couldn't have happened at a better time for the Wildcats.

It's just something that happens during tournament time every year. Players pull amazing feats they were unable to accomplish throughout the season schedule and put their teams in positions to do unimaginable things.

Without a senior like Dietz, K-State becomes a team that needs players to have the best games of their career to achieve success. With Nelson's performance, the Wildcats ended the Mocs' 24-game winning streak – the longest in the nation – and extended their season.

At this point in the season, K-State will need performances like Nelson's to keep its tournament run alive. The Wildcats lost a perimeter threat in Dietz that must be replaced by inside scoring from those who remain and three-point shots from those who rarely take them.

Against the Mocs, K-State was also without Danielle Zanotti, the player figured to replace Dietz in the line-up, because of back spasms. If K-State is without Zanotti again against Louisville tonight, the Wildcats will need another big showing from Nelson or another bench player.

Perhaps Carolyn McCullough, the senior who made her first career start Sunday, will step up and provide a new threat from behind the perimeter. Maybe it will be Shana Wheeler who puts up her career performance with double-digit numbers in points and rebounds.

If not Nelson, McCullough or Wheeler, maybe one of the freshman players like Shalin Spani will record career highs.

Primetime performances in the month of March are why we all like watching the NCAA tournament and why it continues to be exciting. Players like Nelson pop up year after year, and those who are not seniors create questions about whether they will be a big performer next season.

If Nelson keeps up her showing from Sunday, don't be surprised if she becomes the fifth starter in next year's Wildcat line-up.

WOMEN'S GOLF

2 seniors place in the top 20 at Betsy Rawls

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two seniors led the way with top-20 finishes, but it wasn't enough to improve the K-State women's golf team out of 17th place at the Betsy Rawls Invitational in Austin, Texas, March 17-19.

QUICK

Kali Quick finished tied in 13th place with a 14-over par 158 and Michelle Regan tied for 18th with a 15-over par 159.

As a team, K-State was second to last with an 88-over par 664 through two rounds. The only team to finish behind K-State was Texas, who had a 98-over par 674.

New Mexico won the tournament, finishing one stroke in the lead with a 47-over par 623.

Individually for the Wildcats, sophomore Abbi Sunner had a 30-over par 174, which tied for 81st.

Senior Hailey Mireles had a 31-over par 175 and was tied for 85th, and freshman Elise Houtz had a 34-over par 178 and finished in 88th place.

The Wildcats will see action again at the Mountain View Intercollegiate Tournament in Tucson, Ariz., Saturday and Sunday.

ROWING

Wildcats have tough away regatta in Austin

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State rowing team returned home Sunday night after competing in the Longhorn Invitational in Austin, Texas. The three-day event put the Wildcats in competition against some of the top rowing teams in the nation.

K-State opened the invitational against the top-ranked team at the regatta as it faced No. 19 Wisconsin.

The Wildcats were unable to defeat the Badgers as they dropped all four opening-round races.

The second day of the invitational put the Wildcats up against more tough competition with the same result as the previous day. K-State lost all its races against Central Florida and Iowa in the afternoon.

The final day of the Longhorn Invitational put the K-State rowing team against the Iowa rowing team. The Wildcats were unable to come away with a win against Iowa but the races were close. Iowa's margin of victory over the Wildcats was less than two seconds.

Next up for the Wildcat rowing team is the San Diego Crew Classic on April 5.

Fan competition starts texting Gridiron Bash

COURTESY ART

K-State fans can text in votes to help K-State win $1.75 million available in scholarship funds in the first-ever BlackBerry Gridiron Bash. Activities will begin with a pep rally at 6:30 p.m April 18 at Snyder Family Stadium.

The first-ever BlackBerry Gridiron Bash has launched the text component of its Ultimate Fan Competition, enabling K-State fans to text in votes and increase the chances that the university will split the $1.75 million being given to General Scholarship Funds. Votes can be placed by texting "KSU" to 23909.

K-State's activities will begin April 18 at Snyder Family Stadium with a pep rally at 6:30 p.m. followed by a concert from the Goo Goo Dolls at 7 p.m. K-State's 2008 Purple-White Spring Game is set to kick off at 6:30 p.m. on April 19.

More detailed activities for the week will be announced as they become available.

Tied to spring football games and including pep rallies and live concerts at football stadiums with nationally known names, the Gridiron Bash fan competition – being billed as the USA TODAY Bash for Cash Series – will be based 70 percent on fan attendance at Gridiron Bash events (all except for three Gridiron Bash events are being held April 18th, the Friday before spring games) and 30 percent on text in votes.

Daily school standings are being posted on www.gridironbash.com. The Web site also features "talk 'n smack" video being taken as the Gridiron Bash RV tour hits each competing campus and listens to fans talking about their rivaling schools.

Results are also being displayed in weekly national advertisements in both the Sports and Life sections of USA Today.

"In the last week that we've had our text-in component of the fan competition up and running, we've seen dramatic shifts in the number of text-in votes each school is receiving. It's getting pretty exciting," said Shawn Garrity, president of MSL Sports and Entertainment, creators and producers of Gridiron Bash. "The fun, the spirit, the talking smack between schools ... that's what this is all about."

MEN'S GOLF

K-State wins tournament for 1st time in more than 4 years

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team won its first tournament title of the 2007-08 campaign, finishing the Ron Moore Invitational in first place on Sunday. It was the fifth top-5 finish this season for the Wildcats and the team's first tournament title in more than four years.

IDA

The Wildcats, led by sophomores Joe Ida and Mitchell Gregson, shot a total score of 19-under par 845, the fifth-lowest 54-hole team score in school history. The Wildcats held off a third-round charge by national powerhouse Ohio State, ranked No. 50 in the country by www.golfweek.com, to preserve their first win since the 2003 Purina Classic.

Ida led all Wildcats with a three-day total of nine-under par 207, which is the seventh-lowest 54-hole individual score in K-State history. His performance was good enough for a tie for third place in the overall standings. He was joined by Gregson and senior Kyle Yonke as the only Wildcats to finish in the top 20.

Gregson finished tied for 11th with a total score of 5-under 211, and Yonke capitalized on a strong showing in last year's Ron Moore Invitational with a 2-under 214. He finished in a tie for 20th. Junior Robert Streb rebounded from a three-over par 75 in the first round with back-to-back 1-under par 71 to finish with a three-day score of 1-over par 217. Redshirt freshman Ross Geubelle contributed a 4-over par 220 for the Wildcats. Daniel Wood, competing as an individual, shot a 2-under 214, which tied him with Ohio State's Dan Rush for the individual title.

K-State's next competition brings the team back to Kansas. The Wildcats will participate in the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic, Wichita State's home tournament, March 31 at the Wichita Country Club.

Picnic season

Spring weather offers perfect setting for outdoor meals

SARAH BURFORD

It's picnic season. What better way to celebrate spring than to take your dinner outside, away from the table? Quite the illogical form of entertainment, but nevertheless, a fun venture. Whether you're dining with your buddies or on a romantic date, a picnic is a great excuse to get outside and breathe in fresh air. Throw a Frisbee around, sample some wine and cheese, feed your face with watermelon, and have a good time.

The first step to planning such an occasion is to choose a destination.

There are many prime picnic spots in Manhattan.

First, City Park. Just down the street from Aggieville, the park has a picnic shelter, sand volleyball court, grills, tennis courts, a running trail, lovely rose garden and plenty of space to spread out.

The outlook point on Kansas Highway 177, Manhattan Hill and KS Hill have great views.

You could be brave and have a picnic in the Quad, which also has a pretty view, but you might have to endure some stares from curious students.

And last but not least, you could eat on your own front lawn or porch. Easy access to your very own bathroom and kitchen sink is always a plus.

Once you've staked out a spot, you need something to eat. Clean and snacky are, in my opinion, the best types of food for a picnic. Barbecue-sauce hands are not the most attractive when you're cozying up to your honey or trying to catch a football after your meal.

Raw fruit and vegetables are always a good, easy choice. Chips, sandwiches, pasta salad and pudding cups are also easy to bring and clean up. Of course, if you must go with the incredibly greasy, tasty fried chicken – the ultimate picnic pick – just remember the paper towels. Or better yet, bring wet wipes.

If you would rather have fancy fare than the same old picnic stuff, consider the following options. Have a wine and cheese sampler. Buy a couple slices of new and different cheeses, a bunch of green grapes, a bottle of wine or sparkling juice and a baguette. Voila – you've created your own French café.

Or you could have a strictly dessert picnic. Bake chocolate-chip cupcakes; make chocolate-covered strawberries; or whip up some white-chocolate mousse and serve it with fresh berries. You could chase all that chocolate down with a gallon of milk. Gentlemen, choose this option, and your girlfriends will love you forever.

So now you have the spot, you have the food – what else do you need? A few more things. First, a blanket. Not your great-grandma's heirloom quilt, but an old blanket you can stain with mud, streak with grass, spill your Hawaiian Punch all over and not fret about it later. It also should be washable, since one of the aforementioned scenarios is bound to occur. A blanket with a waterproof underside will keep water from seeping through. Wet pants are not stylish.

And lastly, you might want to bring some entertainment for the lull after the meal. Sports items like I mentioned before – Frisbees, footballs – will get your blood flowing after all that food. If you're one of those dexterous people who can tie a rope to two trees and walk across it, more power to you – bring that. If this is a romantic picnic we're talking about, you could whip out a guitar and serenade your date. Or if that's too "Sound of Music" for you, you could just play cards. Or go home.

But no one wants to go home right after a scrumptious picnic. You have to let it settle. Soak in the delight of being outside, away from your routine, away from the traditional tabletop, and bask in the glorious world that is picnicking.

MUSIC REVIEW

Australian band debuts mixture of folk, indie sounds

"The Submarine"

Review by Alex Peak

If folk and indie music hooked up, their love child would be named Whitley.

Though technically listed under the folk genre, 22-year-old Australian native Whitley (Lawrence Greenwood) has developed mellow sounds that strike chords with the likeness of Bright Eyes and The Postal Service.

Songs on Whitley's debut album "The Submarine" reflect somber sounds comprised not only of the expected guitar-drum-bass setup, but also include a banjo, violin, synthesizer and computer-generated beeps, blips and other noises.

Whitley's use of interesting instruments and melodies enable him to delve into traditional country twang along with some indie-rock influence and experimental inklings. Many of his songs start slow but drop a drumbeat and include a number of experimental computer beeps and blips. Despite the overlapping of genre styles, it all works – he produces a pleasant acoustic and earthy feel.

Though the band takes his name and personality, on Whitley's MySpace.com page he does claim a few backup band members: Andy Reed (drums), Alex Hunter (pedal steel and electric guitar), John Sweeney (computers), Luke Bolton (bass) and Chris Bolton ("guitar loop things"). He calls them his "alive in the real world band."

"The Submarine" is an impressive and promising debut. Unlike so many of his fellow musicians in the race for selling out, each song on his album actually sounds different, his lyrics are deep and vivid, and you can understand what he's saying. Though only 22 years young, Whitley sings of loss, regret, depression and love, which gives him an old-soul sound.

An excerpt from "All is Whole"

"All is whole in the end.

And no one ever hears your screams.

And water pouring through the seams,
You walk along and feel night time's cracks.
Your memories are fading.

You can't keep calling.
You can't keep from falling.
And you can't save your soul,
If you can't believe."

Whitley quickly is giving folk music a good name. Apparently, it's no longer a genre for only preschool classrooms and old people.

With a spring packed full of tour dates across the United States and back to motherland Australia, it's only a matter of time until Whitley becomes a household name.

If you like Bright Eyes, The Postal Service and Damien Rice, you should check out Whitley.

Columnist fails to address negative effects of lower drinking age

Editor,

Aubree Casper's article on changing the drinking age law makes sense from the taxation purposes that could help to teach drinking responsibility, yet it doesn't at all recognize the negative effect lowering the drinking age could have.

Imagine if you were a high-school senior taking a class at a junior college and you had a college ID and you could get booze.

Do you not think that your younger friends would be bugging you to buy them booze for the weekends? It would then make it easier for high-school students who are 15 and 16 to get booze. Knowing how my high school was and knowing the maturity level of many 18-year-olds, it is hard to believe lowering the drinking age would teach teens and young people to drink responsibly.

Maybe we just have different views of society, but I don't think many young people can handle it.

KSU once enjoyed Easter Monday off

Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This year's calendar forced most students to make the trek back to Manhattan from their spring breaks on Easter Sunday, while many other schools like Baylor and St. Louis Universities have received an extension because of the holiday. Up until March 1988, K-State also had an extra Monday off.

The following article was written by the Collegian staff in the March 31, 1988, Collegian.

UNIVERSITY ELIMINATES BREAK, SCHEDULES CLASSES FOR MONDAY

Yes, there will be classes on Monday.

In past years, the Monday after Easter has been a university holiday. Beginning this year, however, a change has been made.

"This year, for the first time, Monday is not a student holiday," said University Registrar Don Foster.

The reason, he said, is because the Kansas Board of Regents established Martin Luther King Jr. Day as an official university holiday.

"Therefore, we had to pick up another day. It was basically a trade of days," he said.

Foster said the Regents did not specify which day would have to be used to make up for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday but that administrators believe the Monday after Easter was the best choice.

"One of the other options would have been dead day [the day before spring finals begin]," he said.

Foster said the change has not resulted in many complaints, but just "a lot of confusion."

One reason for the confusion is because the 1987-88 KSU Programmer – published by the Union Program Council Promotions Committee – listed April 4 as a student holiday.

Foster said K-State isn't the only university that has eliminated the after-Easter holiday.

"Most universities – [the University of Kansas] included – cut out the Easter holiday several years ago," he said.

WINGFIELD | Music accompanist says he has 'best job on campus'

waiter and freelance accompanist and served in the National Guard. He also played in several country music bands during country's widespread popularity in the late 1980s. He started as a part-time accompanist in the music department in 1989.

NEVER A 'TYPICAL DAY'

As a staff accompanist, Wingfield said one of his favorite aspects about his job is he rarely has a "typical day." During the fall semester Wingfield teaches Introduction to American Music, a survey course offered for nonmusic majors. He also accompanies the K-State Choir and Collegiate Choir and rehearses for student recitals and performances. During the evenings, Wingfield rehearses for the fall musical from 7 to 10 p.m.

During the spring, Wingfield said he accompanies between three to four student recitals each week. He posts an online calendar with his daily rehearsal schedule so students and faculty members can schedule rehearsals with him as needed.

"One of the really nice things about my job is that it's different from day to day," Wingfield said. "I don't really have a permanent schedule."

Wingfield first reads through musical scores with students and faculty members. If Wingfield and the individual musicians have problems with coordination or speed, Wingfield said he works with the musicians on separate sections. After an initial rehearsal, he and the musicians decide how many additional rehearsals they will need.

For musicians' practice, Wingfield said he often makes a digital recording of his piano accompaniment, converts the recording to an MP3 file and sends an e-mail link to the musicians.

When he receives a song, Wingfield sight reads a song during the first rehearsal with a musician. If rehearsal time is limited, he said he will practice the piece more beforehand.

Using a small mechanical device that clicks, called a metronome, Wingfield practices songs slowly at first until he has it perfected at a higher speed.

While Wingfield played trombone and bass during his teenage years, he said he liked piano mostly because he practiced regularly and studied with a teacher.

"The thing I like about piano is that you can be an orchestra by yourself," he said. "You can make this big sound, and I've always loved the big sound of the piano."

A 'HUMAN FERRARI'

Wingfield and David Witham, graduate student in music, gathered in a small rehearsal space at Fairchild Hall. In his hands, Wingfield carries his two essentials for every rehearsal – a pencil and a metronome.

Witham worked through measure after measure of David R. Gillingham's "Concerto for Marimba and Wind Ensemble." On a relatively quiet Thursday afternoon when most K-State students were away on spring break, Wingfield sat at an electronic keyboard and listened for Witham's notes.

Witham said he considers Wingfield a kindhearted and personable man with great talent. In the music department's percussion division, Wingfield is nicknamed the "human Ferrari" – he responds just as a Ferrari would as a driver taps on its gas, Witham said.

"Every time I go into rehearsal with Bill, I know it's not for Bill – it's for me," Witham said. "I know Bill will be right there with me."

With wind instruments and singers, Wingfield said he listens for breaths as a cue for his part and measure changes. Body movements and gestures signal the changes with stringed instruments, he said.

"Sometimes I have to request that the soloist give me a cue to help us make sure that we're together," Wingfield said. "The really experienced soloists are very easy to follow because they give you a lot of information; they don't let you guess."

Amy Rosine, assistant professor of voice, said Wingfield often offers suggestions about making a piece of music stronger through different interpretations and insights.

"He always has interesting ideas when you work with him, and he's a real collaborator," Rosine said. "He is a man of many talents and feels comfortable in different types of music."

Wingfield said he has been blessed with a talent in sight reading, which helps as he accompanies other musicians.

Through the years, he has developed a catalog of musical chords and memorized how they appear visually.

"If you see them enough times, they're like words. When you see a word like cat, when you're first starting to read you sound out the word. After you've done it a few times, you see the word, and you understand it as a unit.

"For me, it's that way when I sight read, too. I see a chord, and I don't see individual notes. I don't have to think of the individual notes; I see the chord as a unit."

A RECORDING ARTIST

In 2005, Wingfield recorded a cocktail jazz album in his McCain studio. While the album included Wingfield's and others' compositions, he said he plans to record another album this year with all original compositions. Wingfield also would like to post a new jazz composition each week on his personal Web site at www.billwingfield.com.

In his jazz compositions, Wingfield takes an original melodic composition, improvises it and ends the song with the original melody. He said he can compose a jazz piece in about one day.

"I'm going to try to force myself to spend more time doing that because I think it's good practice," Wingfield said. "It's like anything – it's a skill that you can develop – the more you do it, the better it gets."

Wingfield said he considers music a great blessing in life and finds students' initial responses with great music an interesting experience.

"It's never the same from day to day – there's something always fresh, and there's more music than I'll be able to play in 20 lifetimes," he said. "I think I have the best job on campus. Everybody who loves their work thinks they've got the best job. But I think mine is the best because I get to make beautiful music everyday, and I never get in a rut."

nutrition and always having fluids is an important part of that."

Sugared beverages also provide hydration when ill because they provide some nutrient content, Kennedy said. Clear fluids, including Jello and chicken broth, are more tolerable when people have stomach flu and are nauseated, Kennedy said. She said nauseated people should avoid milk-based liquids.

"Some people might feel so nauseous that they can't have anything but ice chips," Kennedy said, "but that's also a way of maintaining hydration."

While sports drinks also are an option to help stay hydrated, Kennedy said they are more suitable for those who are ill for several days.

"If it's a 24-hour bug, regular fluids that most students have access to are OK," Kennedy said.

Obama, Clinton battle for nomination while McCain rests, builds image

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While Sen. John McCain wrapped up the Republican presidential nomination in early March, Sen. Barack Obama and Sen. Hillary Clinton have been embroiled in a feud that has been heated at times and brought issues of race and gender to the forefront.

According to washingtonpost.com, Obama has 1,620 delegates, while Clinton has 1,499, though hundreds of the more than 1,000 superdelegates have not made a decision. A candidate must have at least 2,024 total delegates to secure the party's nominations.

The next primary is in Pennsylvania on April 22, which means both candidates have a month to stake claims in the crucial state.

Though Obama's lead of more than 100 delegates would be hard for Clinton to overcome, the New York senator has vowed to stay in the race, riding her wins in the Texas and Ohio primaries on March 5.

Obama has tried to garner support from the large working-class population in Pennsylvania. Clinton carried Ohio convincingly because of its working-class population and women voters. At the same time, Obama has overwhelmingly won support of voters younger than 25 and black voters.

CONFRONTING RACE

White male voters could be the deciding voters; their perceptions of race have shaped the outcomes of several primaries already. When Obama went on a 10-win caucus streak, he was carrying white men, but in states like Ohio and Texas, Obama had a much tougher time. According to a March 17 Washington Post article, a much higher percentage of white, working-class men said race was a factor in their decision for the Ohio and Texas primaries.

Joe Aistrup, head of the K-State political science department, said race affects white men because they are sensitive to the subject and have long been the leading voice in politics. He also said many white men have a racial resentment toward blacks based on what many feel is a double standard when blacks receive special programs like affirmative action.

"Until now, we just skirted the issue," Aistrup said. "Right now, it is right in front of us."

These racial tensions have come under further scrutiny after reports and videos of Obama's former pastor, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright, who many view as eccentric and anti-American, surfaced on Youtube.com and several news agencies.

On Tuesday, Obama openly addressed the racial divide that still exists in the U.S. at a speech March 18 at the Constitution Center in Philadelphia. In his speech, which has become an Internet hit, Obama referenced the Emancipation Proclamation and the "nation's original sin of slavery," and he asked people to come together to solve the lingering racial tensions in both the black and white communities.

Bryan Cox, co-president of the K-State Young Democrats, said the issue of race is important, but Democrats also need to focus on other issues that affect the United States.

"I think that it is a concern ... but in the end what we need to be talking about, regardless of who the nominee for the Democratic Party, which party is best going to be able to help the American people," Cox, junior in political science, said.

City and university officials are considering new forms of security at K-State in light of past campus shootings like the Northern Illinois University and Virginia Tech tragedies. These options could include multi-thousand-dollar doors that would automatically seal large lecture halls in case of emergency.

ALERT US

City to help K-State improve security

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Virginia Tech, Northern Illinois University and the University of Arkansas are just a few campuses that experienced the tragedy of having a shooter kill and injure students in the past few years. These violent acts have raised the question of what K-State is doing to prepare for such an incident, which is one option being considered by the university.

Alertus is a system of beacons placed in high-traffic hallways. The beacons flash lights and sound an alarm with an audio and text message explaining what is going on in the event of an emergency, according to an informational packet from Alertus Emergency Notification.

According to the packet, the Alertus system could be used for acts of violence and terrorism, natural disasters, technological and mechanical failure and hazardous materials incidents.

"The beacons are designed to be placed in a variety of locations," said Alertus CEO and founder Jason Volk. "Some campuses place them in lobby areas exclusively, and some place them in every classroom."

He said Alertus systems are being used in military

E-mail scam affects KSU students, many others

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent scam e-mails asking WebMail users to provide their eIDs and passwords have affected thousands of K-State students, faculty and staff members, said K-State's information technology security officer.

At least 35 K-State students, faculty and staff members have replied to the spam messages with their account names and passwords, said Harvard Townsend, K-State information technology security officer.

While K-State WebMail users have received 19 different forms of the spam e-mail since Jan. 31, accounts have received most of the spam within the last week, Townsend said.

It is unknown where and who started the spam e-mails, Townsend said. WebMail logins and spam messages have been sent from across the world from locations like Nigeria, Israel, Kenya, United Arab Emirates, Europe and North America.

Companies like Yahoo!, AOL, Microsoft, AT&T, Road Runner and Comcast have blocked K-State e-mails since the recent scam started. Information Technology staff members have contacted these companies and had K-State removed from their block lists, Townsend said.

"The consequences for one person replying to one of these scams can affect everyone on campus," he said. "There was one account early Sexual violence is the most severe form of gender discrimination, said an ex-prosecutor who focused her work on child abuse and sex crimes.

Wendy Murphy, who was the first lawyer in the United States to run a program to provide free legal services to crime victims, gave a lecture to about 75 people titled, "And Justice For Some," yesterday in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Years ago, she said laws forgave men who raped their wives or children because women were considered the husband's property. However, the laws were strict on people who raped other men's wives or children because it was, in a way, stealing property.

Murphy said about 30 years ago, reforms were made to some of these laws. One of these reforms was the rape shield laws, which limited the ability of the defense attorney to ask questions about a victim's past sexual behavior and also prohibited the publication of rape victim's names. Other reforms omitted marital rape exceptions and corroboration requirements.

Though the reforms were created to help end the stereotypes, Murphy said they became Band-Aids that simply covered up a deeper problem. She also said many people thought the underlying discrimination against women no longer existed because of the reformed laws.

"These Band-Aids not only didn't work," she said. "... they covered up the problems."

Murphy said many problems still exist in the legal system, which make it difficult for women to win a rape case.

For example, early in an investigation, rape victims often will be asked irrelevant questions about their mental health and sexual history, which is later used against them by defense attorneys. Murphy said this type of investigation technique only helps strengthen the existing stereotypes that suggest women who are raped must have been too flirtatious, were dressed too revealingly or falsely accused the suspect of rape. However, she said people are more likely to falsely report their own death than to falsely report a rape.

Murphy even said one of her clients, a rape victim, was told by a judge that she could not say the word rape in the courtroom; that she must call it sex or intercourse, and that she could not refer to herself as the victim. Murphy said this is completely unconstitutional, but it still happens.

Murphy is pushing for a new reform to take the force element out of the understanding of rape. Generally, she said rape is defined as penetration without consent, plus force. She said rape does not always involve force, and rape without force is just as bad as rape with force.

In the United States, Murphy said thievery is punished whether or not it was committed forcefully or simply without consent, and the same rules should apply to rape.

"We do not criminalise the taking of bodies without consent," she said. "We do criminalise the taking of stuff without consent."

Abby Heraud, president of Wildcats Against Rape and graduate student in modern languages, said W.A.R. and several other supporting groups and organizations were instrumental in bringing Murphy to K-State.

"It was very interesting that she kept going back to the fact that our legal system values property over our bodies," Heraud said. "I think that's very true and very important."

Mary Todd, director of the K-State Women's Center, said she has encountered some of the discrimination. She said the best way to combat it is to get involved and to simply treat each other with respect.

"Students should teach each other how we want to be treated," she said.

KSU Aviation group aims to end stereotypes

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aviation is one of many professions dominated by masculine images. When people imagine a pilot taking to the skies, decked out in helmet, goggles and wind-whipping scarf, the picture is almost always that of a man.

The women of K-State–Salina, however, are banding together to change this stereotypical image.

Kelley Coons, sophomore in technology management with an interest in aviation at K-State–Salina, has been a member of a group dedicated to advancing women from the passenger's seat to the captain's chair for two years. The Women In Aviation Club, located in Salina, has been encouraging girls and women to join aviation for about eight years.

Coons grew up with an airport next door and watched as her father flew plane after plane. After spending years watching, Coons said she decided she also wanted to fly.

"We start flying on day one at K-State–Salina. I have 155 hours in an airplane right now," Coons said. "It was kind of nerve racking ... but once you're in the air, it's amazing because you can see all of these little towns and you can hear the bigger airlines talking through the radio. It's like living your dream."

Not only does WIA offer members a chance to grasp their flying inspirations, but faculty adviser Lucy Kollhoff said that it also provides a great opportunity for future aviators to network with possible employers.

17 members of WIA are currently attending a conference in San Diego, Calif. The conference has a "California Dreamin'" theme, and Coons said it is meant to reflect the dreams and hopes of the students attending the conference.

The Ninety-Nines are just one of several successful groups of female pilots that attend the annual conferences. Kollhoff said the Ninety-Nines began in 1929 as a group uniting 99 U.S. female pilots.

"It's a real honor to listen to those people and meet them and listen to the stories they tell," Kollhoff said. "I think there's a lot of learning that can come from this group."

As a fourth-year member of WIA, Tricia Erker, senior in technical management with an emphasis in aviation, has gathered not only many connections from such conferences but also learned many life skills when it comes to succeeding as a female aviator.

"At the conference, they always hold different sessions, and they vary from training to stories of women that have been in the industry for a long time," Erker said. "It's just learning from others how to actually succeed as a woman in the aviation industry and how to improve what has already been achieved."

Though the organization is geared toward inspiring young women, men also comprise a portion of the club. About six of the WIA members attending the conference in San Diego are males.

As they network with possible future employers alongside female members, Coons said the men in the club create a healthy support system.

In order to attend the conference each year, WIA must participate in a variety of fundraising activities. Working toward one common goal, Coons said, has created more unity among its members.

"This year, we've really turned ourselves around," she said. "We worked with third and fourth graders to teach them about aviation and we've done a lot of fundraisers to go to the conference. We've all really come together this year and our number one goal is to go to the conference and make those connections with future employers."

Though Coons hopes to work in air traffic control and Erker has secured a job with the U.S. Marine Corps, both have used WIA to make connections and improve their futures.

Defying all stereotypes, they said flying is no longer just for the boys.

"We've noticed there are not a lot of women in the aviation field and that's why when we go to conference, we like to network with other woman pilots and find out how they got there," Coons said. "My graduating class has two other pilots that are females and the rest are men. They don't take you seriously, but in reality, you're just as good or even better."

on that was used to send out 100,000 spam messages just from one person replying to the message."

After an eID password is provided through an e-mail reply, spam e-mails are sent from the compromised account to other accounts from across the world, Townsend said.

Townsend said it is most likely that more than one person sent the spam e-mails. While K-State usually doesn't pursue legal action with e-mail scams because of a lack of resources, the university plans to collect information with other affected universities and notify law enforcement officials, Townsend said.

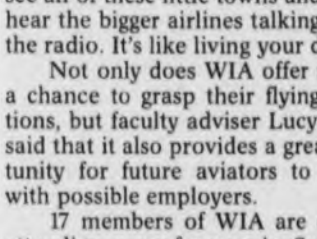
Other universities who received the spam e-mails include the University of Kansas Medical Center, University of Arkansas, University of Indiana, Cornell University, University of California-Irvine, Southern Illinois University, Yale University, Mississippi State University and many others.

According to K-State's IT Web site, those who replied to any scam e-mails and provided their passwords should check their WebMail configuration for changes. They should specifically check their "Reply-to:" address and signature blocks, according to the Web site.

After IT officials determine that a K-State eID account has sent spam messages, the account's password is reset so perpetrators can no longer access the account. IT Help Desk officials then notify those whose accounts have been compromised.

"The defense is simple in that people simply should not reply to them," Townsend said, "but unfortunately the hackers are getting better at being plausible and therefore tricking people to think it's legitimate."

K-State's IT staff cannot prevent spam e-mails and scams because they change often and are sent from multiple locations across the world, Townsend said. He also said IT could not have set up one spam filter for the 19 different forms of the recent scam.



IT and K-State officials will never ask students, faculty or staff members for their password through e-mail, Townsend said.

"The rule here is very simple – never reply with your password under any circumstances," he said. "The same is true with other personal information or financial account information – no legitimate business will ever ask for that in an e-mail."

Who is watching you?

Spitzer's resignation bittersweet because of past watchdog actions

BRETT KING

Sex, scandal and politics once again have made their way into the minds of citizens of this country. Back and forth, both parties have been resigning in disgrace because of sex scandals. Former Gov. Eliot Spitzer of New York is the most recent politician to resign from his office for being caught with his pants down.

According to the CNN Web site on March 12, Spitzer's name was discovered to be involved with a prostitution ring through a U.S. Department of Justice investigation. Evidence collected against "The Emperor's Club" was acquired through the use "of wiretaps and accessing text messages."

Spitzer's fall from power is a bittersweet event; his past actions have come back to haunt him.

During summer 2007, Spitzer's administration was at the forefront of a campaign to smear the New York Senate Republican leader Joe Bruno. Spitzer had the New York State Police keep surveillance on Bruno and report what they had seen.

Bruno was caught flying in a taxpayer-funded helicopter into the city of Manhattan for a few fundraising events. According to the Albany Times Union, on July 1, 2007, New York Attorney General Andrew Cuomo was involved in the investigation that ended up exonerating Bruno because the trips were, "permissible under the existing policy for the use of state aircraft."

What was discovered from the investigation is that Spitzer's administration was responsible for leaking information, and also "engaged in planning and producing media coverage."

This investigation, which showed Spitzer's administration acting like a puppet master for this media fiasco, cost taxpayers dearly. The New York Daily News reported on Oct. 18, 2007, the "Troopergate" investigation cost the tax payers $1.5 million for $72,000 worth of helicopter flights.

Unfortunately for Spitzer, the investigation against him has produced evidence that could find him guilty, but his actions are not what the citizens of the United States should be nervous about.

Following the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, Congress passed the Patriot Act, which was designed to make it easier for the federal government to investigate and prosecute terrorists living here and abroad.

The Patriot Act has been successful since its inception in preventing terrorist attacks on U.S. soil, but it also has been increasingly used in other ways against those with no terrorist ties.

A government audit of the FBI's use of the Patriot Act was released on March 7. According to CNN, on March 9, the audit showed "the FBI was guilty of 'serious misuse' of the power to secretly obtain private information." The article concerning the audit also said "in 2004 and 2005, more than half the targets of the national security letters were U.S. citizens."

These national security letters are requests for information, which "the FBI has made as many as 56,000 requests a year for information using the letters since the Patriot Act was passed in October 2001."

Spitzer's adultery is between him, his family and God – not for the Department of Justice. If the government is willing to go after its own, it should make the average citizen nervous as well.

OK. Sidewalks work just like American roads. You walk on the right. Stay to the right.

Just because you drive a Dodge doesn't mean you're a cowboy.

I just got shushed in the library.

Last time I checked, Moore Hall did set the bar for stupidity.

When you use a feather in bed, it's sexy. But when you use a whole chicken, it's just downright kinky.

I would start a revolution, but I just bought a new hammock.

Mine's bigger than yours. That's what she said.

Mine's bigger than yours, and I'm a girl.

You smell like hot elephant poop on the side of a zoo barn in the middle of August, and I hate you. So there.

Michael Beasley's wall on Facebook is totally hilarious.

You would if you had ears.

What is up with all the drunken people on a Monday night after break?

No, no. We're going to wait until after spring break to start all the road construction.

Dear College of Agriculture: Thank you very much for the food. Oh, and way to be modest.

If I was an RA, I'd steal stuff from people's rooms.

Fourum, I'm sorry I cheated on you 15 times over spring break. I'll take you out to a nice pizza dinner to make it up.

Actually, College of Agriculture, the College of Education and Engineering were here first. You're third in line. Love, everybody else.

I lost my friend. He's flat, brown and furry. Last seen at 1865 Platte. He's my only friend. Please find him for me.

Whoever made the comment about getting rid of Frank Martin: You're an idiot.

I'm not sure. I'm HIV positive.

I loved a woman who was unclean.

I know the real reason why Manhattan stinks, and it's not the College of Ag. It's because it smells.

Hey, guy in the blue and purple and white camouflage sweater: Animals see that.

To the girl wearing the extremely tight leggings with the zip-up jacket: Those leggings are too small, and you are too big to be wearing them. And please take off that fanny pack.

Does anybody else think it's cool that Kansas State University was on The History Channel for our grain science and flour milling thing? Because I sure do.

To the kid who's looking for a good girl: There's so many good girls out there. I just don't think you're looking in the right places.

To the two making out in the Hale Library stacks: That was hot.

Honestly, if you do know every Greek house's handshake by now, you're kind of dumb.

It's warm now. Please finish the parking garage.

If you do this to me, I will eat your face.

I'm a good girl.

Nothing says "tool" more than a paddle on the front of your Jeep.

Let's stop fighting via the Fourum. I love everybody.

Reasons for fuel prices puzzling

GRADY BOLDING

I went to my hometown of Great Bend, Kan., two Fridays ago, and I noticed that gasoline cost $3.15 per gallon. A few days later, I was happy to see the prices drop to $3.11. But it wasn't until March 18 that I noticed that gas was at $3.09. I was ecstatic.

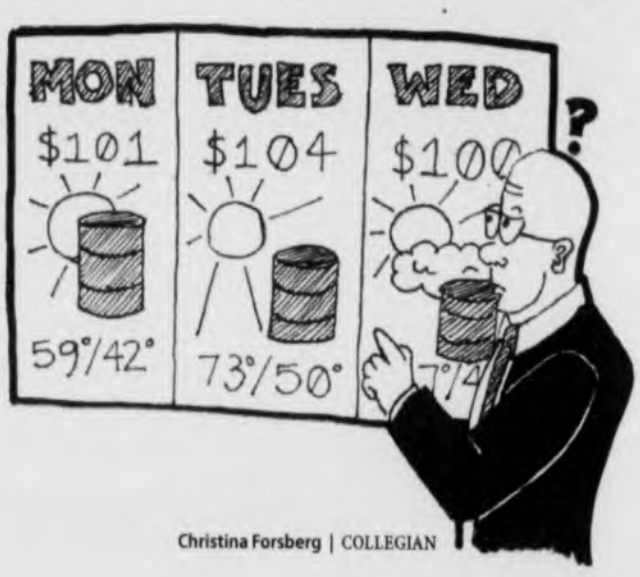
I should not have been ecstatic about that price. As a matter of fact, nobody should be.

It's now obvious to most Americans that life will never be the same at the pump.

Since the beginning of the new millennium, fuel prices have been on a gradual increase to ridiculous proportions. According to a Feb. 27 CBS report on, economists predict average gas prices to reach $4 per gallon by this summer. Many consumers are simply sitting back and accepting this bitter reality.

The CBS report claims that growing demand in oil, especially with the upcoming warmer seasons, is the prime cause for spiking prices. If you combine that with the decline in value of the U.S. dollar, you'll get a lot of headaches at the pump.

In June 2007, ABC consumer reporter John Stossell cited several reasons for high fuel prices.



"So, demand is up 3 percent in the last year, but there's only 1 percent more supply, because refineries can't refine more gasoline," Stossell wrote. "And that's not surprising because refineries are old – not one has been built in America since 1976. One reason is that local opposition and tough environmental rules helped make them unprofitable to build."

While those are legitimate reasons, other alleged causes of the crisis have left a lot of heads spinning.

On March 5, when oil prices hit $104 per barrel, NBC reported how the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Counties rebuffed calls to increase oil output after accusing the United States of economic "mismanagement."

Afterward, President Bush made the following comments at a conference in Washington: "America has got to change its habit. Dependency on oil presents a real challenge to our economy."

I never thought I'd see the day when Bush tells America to get off oil. But there you have it – OPEC blames the United States' economic mismanagement for oil prices; Bush blames the American people – and states the obvious, yet again.

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Nothing gets my blood boiling more than what the Associated Press reported on March 9. The article stated how survey editor, Trilby Lundberg, indicated that prices would continue rising because of Daylight Savings Time and the approach of warmer weather. I have a hard enough time with the warmer weather part – but Daylight Savings Time?

To sum it up: my grandfather is a CEO of an oil company in central Kansas.

All his life he has known that one day oil would be more than $100 a barrel.

However, he never thought he'd live to see that day come. Better yet, there's really not a clear answer as to what is causing the spike.

Until the United States can figure out what else might be causing these ridiculous spikes in prices, many of us will suffer a "great depression" on our own individual levels.

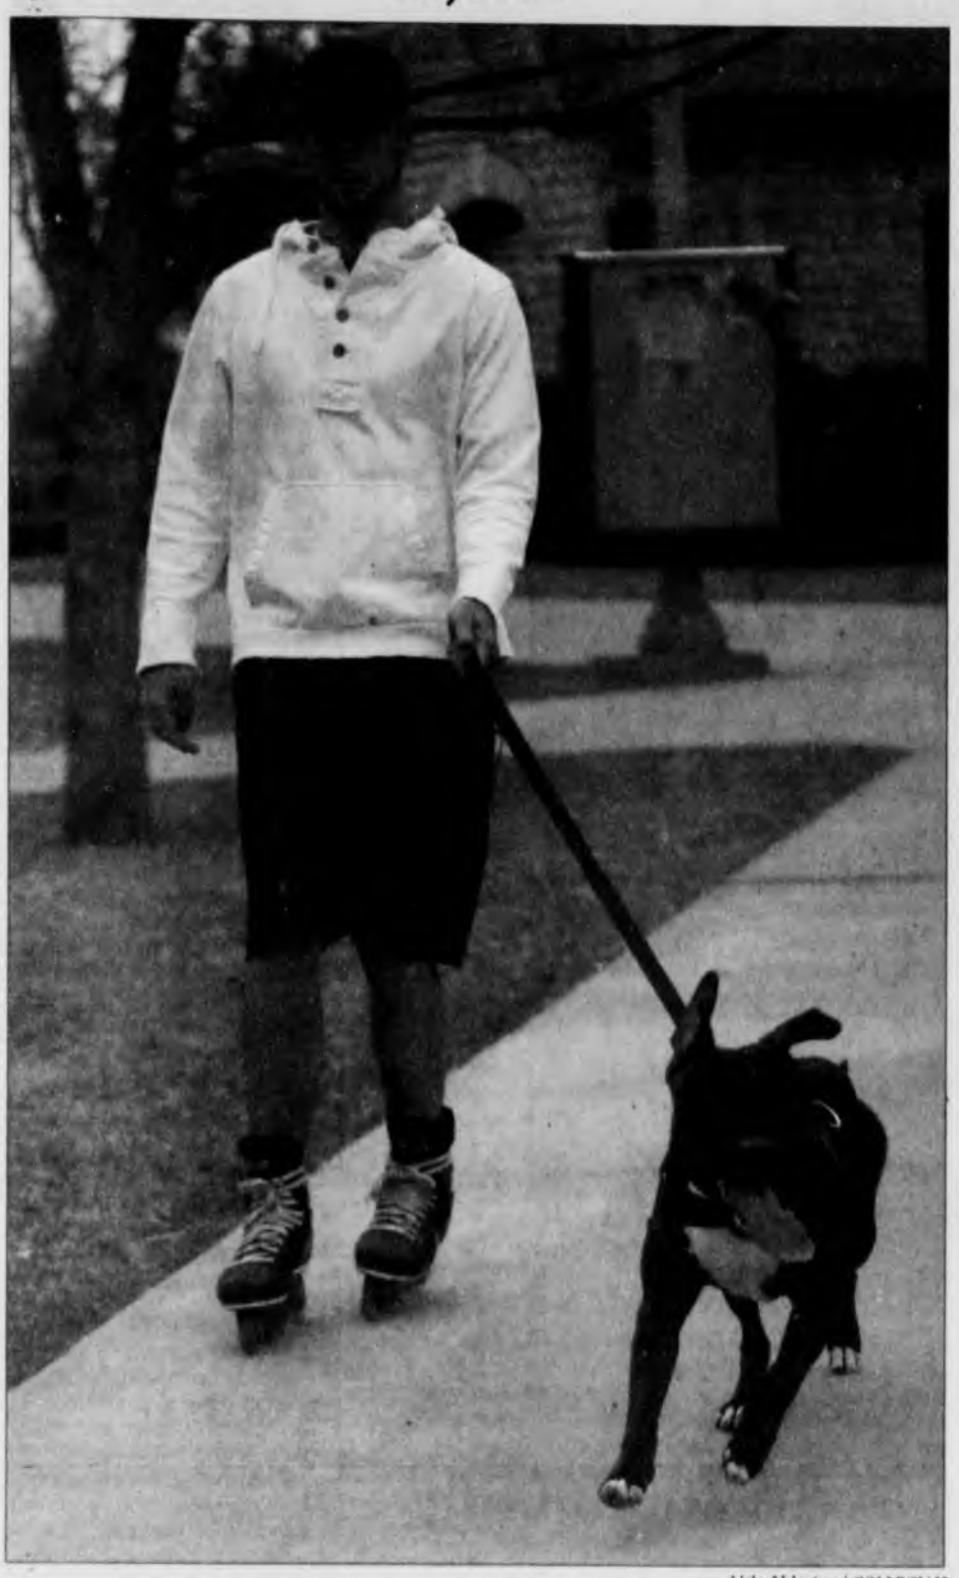
TO THE POINT

Security steps need close evaluation, not quick change

Since the tragic shootings on Virginia Tech's campus last spring, security on campus has visibly increased this year in places like residence hall check-ins and also technologically through a new text-messaging alert system.



TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Now, K-State is considering taking another step to secure our campus on an even tighter level: automatically locking doors that could be controlled from the campus police station. The city/university projects fund committee met on March 10 to discuss the 2009 budget, which included research on safety-related products like Alertus, a brand of very high-tech, very pricey doors. One door could run the university $10,000, depending on how specialized it is.

While we should be grateful that we attend a school that cares enough about the safety of its students to look into these safety precautions, we should also be wary of such expensive investments. A knee-jerk response to a situation at another college is probably not an effective one. Not to mention the Alertus doors cannot prevent tragedies like Virginia Tech from occurring; after all, they only lock from the inside, and anyone in a lecture hall could still harm students.

The best way to go about boosting security on campus is to weigh all options carefully and consider price and effectiveness.

Event promotes T-shirt exchange among colleges across country

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students needing a wardrobe change can switch up their style by participating in the Stride Gum T-shirt exchange.

Today on the Bosco Union Plaza from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., students can bring clean T-shirts with no holes, stains or inappropriate gestures or language in exchange for a T-shirt from another university, fraternity/sorority, town or any other trendy T-shirt in the exchange.

Students can enjoy free Stride Gum samples at the event as well.

The previous tour stops include California State Fullerton, Arizona State University, Texas Tech University, University of New Orleans and Florida State University. K-State students will be able to trade shirts from these universities at the exchange.

PICK UP A T-SHIRT FROM A PREVIOUS CAMPUS ON THE TOUR:

NO. 4 LOUISVILLE 80, NO. 5 K-STATE 63

No more dancin'

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward, Ashley Sweat, fights for a rebound with Louisville forward Candyce Bingham during the second-round NCAA Tournament game on Tuesday. K-State received a 16-point performance from Sweat, but still fell to the No. 4-seeded Cardinals 63-80.

K-State's season ends with loss in NCAA 2nd round

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

K-State's season ended short of the Sweet Sixteen, and Louisville advanced on its 12th attempt to make it out of the second round as the Cardinals beat the Wildcats, 80-63.

Sophomore forward Ashley Sweat had 16 points, and reserve junior guard Kelsey Nelson added 12 to lead K-State (22-10).

The Big 12 Conference regular-season champions were playing their second game without senior guard Kimberly Dietz, who hurt her knee in the Wildcats' loss to Iowa State in the Big 12 tournament. Nelson, a virtual unknown before the tournament, tried to fill the void. The junior, who scored 23 points all season, had 20 points off the bench to help the Wildcats beat Chattanooga in the first round.

The Cardinals were up 6-5 less than three minutes in before going on a 13-0 run over the next five minutes. They hit eight of their first 10 shots. Louisville finished the game hitting 53 percent from the field.

K-State tried to stay in it with three-point shooting. The Wildcats held Louisville scoreless for almost four minutes, and back-to-back threes by Nelson and Carolyn McCullough cut the Louisville lead to 25-19.

Louisville used a 10-0 run to stretch it back to 35-19. The Cardinals out-rebounded the Wildcats 21-8 in the first half, grabbing 13 offensive boards.

A three-pointer by sophomore guard Kari Kincaid just before the buzzer cut the deficit to 41-28 at the half.

But K-State could get any closer than 12 points in the second half. Louisville had a 10-0 run to build a 65-41 lead midway through and cruised.

Angel McCoughtry scored 24 and the Cardinals (26-9) beat K-State 80-63 Tuesday to advance to the regional semifinals. Candyce Bingham added 12 points, 10 rebounds and seven assists for the Cardinals, who have won 13 of their last 15 games. Chauntise Wright added 13 points.

The Cardinals won the rebounding battle, 37-22, scoring 40 points in the paint while holding K-State to 20. Louisville went down low early, finding the 6-foot-3 Wright under the basket for several easy lay-ups. Louisville will go on to play either Georgia or North Carolina in New Orleans.

K-State returned to the NCAA tournament this year after winning the NIT in the 2005-06 season. They were also runners-up last season. During the 2004-05 campaign, they fell short of the Sweet Sixteen in a 60-63 loss to Vanderbilt.

The Wildcats went 13-3 in the Big 12 this year after coming in last a year ago. They have not been to a regional semifinal since 2002.

Wildcats should be OK

JONATHAN WRIGHT

We all know what will transpire over the next several months. With K-State's hopes of a trip to college basketball's coveted Final Four crushed, it is now time to look to next year. Freshman forward Michael Beasley is likely headed to the NBA, and it isn't a far stretch to say fellow freshman forward Bill Walker will follow suit.

With one of the most prolific scoring duos in Big 12 Conference history likely making the jump to the NBA, a giant void will be left in the K-State roster, but it's not time to hit the panic button. Yes, it is difficult to replace so much talent, but Rivals.com did not rank K-State's 2007 recruiting class No. 1 without merit. This team is still loaded with talent from top to bottom.

First of all, freshman guard Jacob Pullen is probably the third best freshman of the six brought in this year. Although blessed with lightning quickness and athleticism, his college career got off to a rocky start. He struggled to adjust to the quicker and more physical brand of college basketball. Now, with a full season under his belt, he has matured more than any player and has turned into quite a point guard. Remember this sentence: Jacob Pullen will be an All-American if he stays four years.

Freshman forward Dominique Sutton is another talent from this class. I'm thoroughly convinced nobody in the Big 12 is as athletic as Sutton. His lanky build and keen reflexes allow him to shut down some of college basketball's best players. Sutton guarded KU junior forward Brandon Rush so tightly he violated several state laws, and in the NCAA Tournament he put USC's freshman guard O.J. Mayo in prison with his suffocating defense. If he can just refine his offensive game, he could be a scary match up for any team.

I don't know a whole lot about freshman forward Jamar Samuels, but from what I've seen, heard and read, he's remarkably athletic. He's got a real talent for going after and grabbing rebounds.

The jury is still out on freshman guard Fred Brown. He is as quick as they come, and he has all the tools to be great. His decision-making is somewhat questionable, however. Most likely, this can be attributed to lack of basketball maturity. He's a great shooter and ball handler and should have a solid sophomore season.

Freshman forward Ron Anderson is the X-factor. If Beasley and Walker leave, the Wildcat front line will be wide open. He has shown flashes of potential throughout the season. He plays harder than almost any player on the team. Thursday's game against USC might have been his breakout performance. He could make huge strides at K-State.

A big key to K-State's success will be the additions of junior guard Denis Clemente and hopefully, senior forward David Hoskins. Clemente, a transfer from the University of Miami, is a speedy guard with a knack for putting the ball in the basket. He shot a respectable 43.5 percent from the field and 38 percent from beyond the arc in his sophomore season at Miami.

Hoskins, on the other hand, was arguably K-State's most valuable player last year. Although his injury was unfortunate, it might be a blessing in disguise if he is granted a medical redshirt.

With signing day quickly approaching, head coach Frank Martin still can capitalize on several recruits that haven't committed anywhere yet. If he can do that and get the cycle started, K-State could develop into a national power before you can say Final Four.

Cats take on Creighton after 3-game sweep

Fresh off of a three-game sweep of Binghamton, the K-State baseball team will play host to the Creighton Blue Jays Wednesday night at 6:30 p.m. at Tointon Family Stadium. The three-game win streak marks the Wildcats first series sweep of the season.

While most students enjoyed a week off for spring break, the Wildcats were busy with series against Nebraska, Brigham Young and Binghamton. Over that course, K-State struggled to produce runs, ultimately leading to a 3-5 record over the span. After a weekend sweep by Big 12 foe Nebraska, K-State dropped another two-game set to Brigham Young.

"Getting swept at home is never good, but I felt like two of those games against Nebraska really got away from us," coach Brad Hill said. "Then at BYU, we just didn't play well in two games that we could have had if we would have gone out and played the way we're supposed to."

Consistently scoring runs seems to be the main issue with this team at the moment, and Hill said measures are being taken to correct this.

"Practices have been almost wholly based on ...ualizing runners on base, and looking to find a gap to hit a ball that's going to score someone," Hill said.

Creighton has seen postseason success in the recent history. The defending Missouri Valley Conference Champions, NCAA Regional-qualifying and winners of 45 games, will come to Manhattan looking to pick up their eighth road win of the season. Even with the success that Creighton has had over the last few seasons, this series has been back and forth, with either team taking a pair of wins over the last five years.

Wildcat pitcher AJ Morris (1-1, 6.39) will get the start for the Wildcats. Hill said he will have to prepare to face a squad that is dangerous from top to bottom and will not only have to hit for average, but for power as well.

"They play extremely hard, and compete extremely hard," Hill said. "That's why they've had the success that they've had over the last couple years."

Junior Nate Tenbrink is the only Wildcat to start all 21 games this season for K-State, and while the record may not show it, he's said he thinks the team is making progress.

"We're making progress, and that's all that matters," Tenbrink said. "The win-loss [ratio] doesn't show that, but we are making strides everyday. I see it as a progression, and this team is getting better every day."

Sig Ep fraternity invokes mercy rule at intramural basketball championship

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a dominating performance in the intramural basketball final, Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity was near perfect.

Sig Ep, the fraternity league champions with a 5-0 playoff record, crushed independent league champs Andrew Don't Shoot, 54-19. The game was called with 10 minutes to go in because of the mercy rule in intramural basketball at K-State.

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Addison Price, junior in marketing and guard for the Sigma Phi Epsilon basketball team, runs through a tunnel formed by his fraternity teammates after the team's victory over its opponent Andrew Don't Shoot during the intramural championship basketball game at the Peter's Recreation Complex on Tuesday night.

Andrew Don't Shoot wasn't originally going to play, but the independent team highlighted by sophomore quarterback Josh Freeman was disqualified for having an ineligible player. Daniel Gonzalez, a former K-State receiver who graduated in December, was not allowed to be on the team because he wasn't a K-State student.

From the opening play, Sig Ep was in control of the game, jumping out to a 5-0 lead. Andrew Don't Shoot was able to answer with a bucket, but the three-point deficit was the closest they would get the rest of the game.

Andrew Don't Shoot just couldn't put the ball in the basket. They made only eight baskets the entire game.

Tyler Price, senior in electronic journalism and member of Andrew Don't Shoot, said he and his teammates were saddened by their loss, but they were still grateful.

"Sig Ep played really well and their fans are interesting," Price said. "This was our second loss, but it was really sweet to play in."

Addison Price, junior in marketing and member of the Sig Ep team, said their team came into the season with their eyes on winning the title.

"We knew coming into the year we were a good team," Price said. "Me and my roommate set a goal to win the championship. Big props to our crowd because they followed us to every game."

Students should maintain regular healthy sleep patterns to avoid developing deprivation, devastating disorders

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aaron Solis isn't worried about the future of his erratic sleep patterns, he said as he yawned in the middle of his sentence.

"This is college, it's just what you do," Solis, freshman in engineering, said. "Sleep is for the weak."

Solis is just one of many sleep-deprived college students across the U.S., struggling to stay awake during classes, at work and even just while the sun is up.

"I'd say the amount of sleep I get every night varies," Solis said. "I usually go to bed any time between two and six in the morning and get up in time for class."

Solis said last semester he had several morning classes, but because he would sleep in so late, he frequently missed them. This semester, he scheduled all of his classes for the afternoon so he would be awake enough to attend.

Don Hedden, director of the Sleep Disorder Services at Mercy Regional Hospital, said sleep deprivation and disorders are a growing trend among college students. He also said there is a significant need to understand that everyone needs quality sleep to function not only daily, but in the long-term as well.

"Sleep used to be just something you did, but now, it's more of an issue that needs to be evaluated," Hedden said. "Sleep is really what impacts your day-to-day the most."

According to a USA Today article from Oct. 25, 2007, a study done by Pamela Thacher, psychology professor at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., found that students with erratic, shortened sleep schedules had consistently lower grade point averages than those who maintained healthy sleep patterns.

> "This is college, it's just what you do. Sleep is for the weak."
> — Aaron Solis, FRESHMAN IN ENGINEERING

Hedden said college is a time when many people develop sleeping disorders, often starting with just depriving the body of much-needed rest.

He said if not taken care of immediately, these issues could become much larger and harder to deal with.

One of the most common disorders Hedden said he has been seeing in the last few years is Obstructive Sleep Apnea. OSA occurs when a person stops breathing while they're sleeping because of excess throat tissue obstructing the air passage, but their mind and body are still trying to take a breath. He said the extra carbon dioxide released into the bloodstream during these breathing malfunctions arouses people when they sleep so their throat muscles will relax and they can breathe. However, Hedden explained that this doesn't mean the person is truly asleep or awake, but rather in a restless state of interrupted sleep.

"A lot of people will wake up in the morning thinking they got a full night's rest," he said. "But really, it wasn't quality sleep because they were waking up and weren't even aware of it."

Hedden said most people are not aware that the quality of sleep is more important than just the time.

"What is that they say in the movies? 'I can sleep when I'm dead.' Well, if you don't sleep, you will eventually die," he said. "Purposeful sleep deprivation, like all-nighters, is not healthy."

So why are students going to sleep when early-morning risers wake-up?

"My body just doesn't go to sleep anymore until it wants to," Solis said. "I get more done late at night than I do during the day."

"And usually Cody [Gulotta, freshman in pre-occupational therapy and Solis' roommate] is up and we hang out. There is just always something to do."

Hedden said this complete shift in sleeping routine is called Circadian Rhythm sleep disorder, and occurs frequently among college-aged students and people working graveyard shifts.

He said this system could be effective if a routine is established.

In other words, if someone is sleeping from 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. uninterrupted every day, then they should be able to get enough quality sleep to function healthily.

As for Solis, he said he likes his new routine. He even created a Facebook.com group called "Sleep is for the weak" to share stories of late-night adventures and his personal sleep code of ethics.

"It's definitely a self-imposed state; I love it," he said. "It's just a lot more hours in the day being used."

SIGNS OF A SLEEP DISORDER:

— excessive tiredness
— poor grades/grade point average
— difficulty focusing in class, listening to lectures
— mood swings, short temper

— Don Hedden, director of the Sleep Disorder Services at Mercy Regional Hospital

COMMON SLEEP DISORDERS:

— Insomnia: Difficulty falling asleep and waking too early, or no problem falling asleep but difficulty staying asleep.
— Sleep Apnea: An interruption in breathing during sleep. Typically it is accompanied by loud snoring. Apnea during sleep consist of brief periods throughout the night in, which breathing stops.
— Narcolepsy: A chronic disorder affecting the brain where regulation of sleep and wakefulness take place. Narcolepsy can be thought of as an intrusion of dreaming sleep (REM) into the waking state. People with narcolepsy can fall asleep while at work, talking and driving a car. These sleep attacks can last from 30 seconds to more than 30 minutes.

SLEEP HYGIENE IS A SET OF GUIDES TO ENSURE SLEEP HABITS ARE BEING MAINTAINED:

— Avoid vigorous exercise at least four hours prior to bedtime.
— Also avoid caffeine, cigarettes and other stimulants after 10 a.m.
— Be sure to go to sleep and wake up at the same time each day, even on weekends.
— Establish a bedtime ritual like reading or taking a warm bath, similar to what children do before they go to sleep every night. Make sure it's something relaxing and soothing.

KING'S KITCHEN

Cook: It's time for grilling season now that it's warmer

BRETT KING

Spring break could not have fallen during a better time. I spent my break in sunny Las Vegas. Even though the saying goes, "What happens in Vegas stays in Vegas," there is one story I can't keep hidden.

Yours truly was blessed to have the opportunity to work in the famous Emeril's New Orleans Fish House at the MGM Grand Hotel. For half a day, I worked with their saucier chef on many different sauces used for the meals. This experience was the most amazing part of my trip, and I would like to once again thank the staff for the amazing experience.

Last week saw the passing of the first day of spring, which brings about my favorite time of the year – grilling and smoking season. The smoky scent of meats cooking on a grill often brings friends and family together to share a meal; so start up the smokers and grills, crack a few beers and relax with those closest to you.

HICKORY APPLE BOURBON SMOKED RIBS

4 slabs of baby back ribs
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon ground cloves
½ teaspoon white pepper
1 teaspoon ground cumin
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 ½ cups of apple cider
1/3 cup of brown sugar
½ teaspoon of ground black pepper
⅛ cup of bourbon (Maker's Mark or Jim Beam)
1 stick of salted butter
3 red apples
3 quarts of water

Soak hickory wood in 3 quarts of water for 24 hours in water pan for smoker. Cut slabs of ribs in half and set aside; in a small bowl mix cinnamon, ground cloves, white pepper, cumin, garlic powder and salt. Stir with a whisk until completely mixed. Rub dry mix over the ribs and place back into refrigerator.

In a sauce pan, heat apple cider to boil. While apple cider is heating up, slowly add bourbon, brown sugar, and black pepper. After bringing it to a boil, lower the heat and add butter 1 tablespoon at a time. Whisk mixture to avoid breaking – butter separates above other liquid.

Cut red apples into small half-inch cubes and add to water and hickory wood chips. Start the heating elements for the smoker and place ribs on grates. With a marinating brush, smother ribs with apple cider/bourbon mixture.

Continue to spread liquid once an hour until smoking is completed. Heat until ribs reach between 130 and 140 degrees, which generally takes 7 to 8 hours.

BRITNEY FAILS IN ESTATE APPEAL AGAINST FATHER

Britney Spears has failed in a bid to request an appeal over her father taking control of her estate. James Spears was granted custody of his daughter's property and finances while the singer was in a psychiatric unit. The terms of the court order gives her father conservatorship until July 31, 2008.

Rumors that Spears is being lined up to appear in the next "I'm A Celebrity, Get Me Out of Here", are apparently way off the mark.

BAILEY-RAE'S HUSBAND DIES SUDDENLY

Corinne Bailey-Rae is mourning over the sudden and tragic death of her husband. Its alleged that saxophonist Jason Rae, 31, died of a alcohol and drug overdose. Police found his body on Saturday in the Hyde Park area of Leeds, and subsequently arrested a 32 year old man on suspicion of supplying controlled drugs.

Rae was the saxophonist in The Haggis Horns, who'd performed with Mark Ronson and Amy Winehouse. The band have canceled their upcoming shows.

Corinne and Jason met in a Leeds jazz club and were married in 2001.

ELECTION | Many claim Democrats have turned campaigns negative

ON THE ATTACK

During this time, Clinton and her husband, former president Bill Clinton, have questioned Obama on his lack of Washington experience and views in international issues like the war in Iraq and trade. Clinton has always claimed to be the candidate with the most experience, she served longer in Senate, and also was the First Lady in the White House for eight years.

Both candidates have increased critiques of each others rhetoric and stances, in what some people think is an increasingly attack-ridden race. Joe Aistrup, head of the Political Science Department, said both candidates, especially Hillary, typically increase the negative advertisements and critiques when they are behind in the race.

"Usually, when they think they are losing, they go negative on the other candidate," Aistrup said.

Meanwhile, McCain has tried to solidify his stances as a strong Republican candidate with foreign relation and government experience. He recently traveled to the Middle East and has tried to distance himself from the two Democratic candidates.

"Sometimes less is more," Aistrup said. "He just needs to go out and get some photo opportunities ... and mend fences within the Republican Party."

Many conservative talk-show hosts like Rush Limbaugh and Ann Coulter have criticized McCain for not being Conservative enough, but Chris Kovarik, vice president for the K-State College Republicans, said most Republicans do not follow these opinions religiously.

"These people are just trying to sell books and get radio play," Kovarik, a senior in business management, said.

Kovarik said McCain should try to show another side of himself and take advantage of the opportunity to campaign as the Republican presidential candidate, while the Democrats will probably battle until August.

"That's a huge advantage," Kovarik said, "because he can fundraise and do a lot of things the Democrats can't."

Cox said McCain is at a disadvantage because few people are paying attention to him, while the two Democratic candidates are still debating the issues and establishing strong campaign relationships in states that still have primaries like Pennsylvania and North Carolina.

"Having those organization with the skills, the expertise and the experience from the primary season and to take that into the election, it's not going to hurt the Democratic Party, it's going to build the Democratic Party," Cox said.

ALERT | Talks to continue in June

installations as well as hospitals, schools and universities, and are effective primarily because they reduce the degrees of separation to one, two or three degrees.

Alertus is just one option city and university officials are considering for K-State's improved safety.

"Communicating during a crisis to warn [students] of a pending situation requires a multi-pronged approach," said Bruce Shubert, associate vice president for administration and finance.

He said the university is already using a loud-speaker on top of Anderson Hall to broadcast messages in emergency situations and is looking at using the campus tornado-warning sirens as another means of communicating to students.

The city/university projects-fund committee met on March 10 to discuss the 2009 budget, which included research on safety-related products like Alertus. Committee members said they wanted to implement automatically locking doors that could be controlled from the campus police station. The doors would allow people to exit, but stop people from entering to become victims of a shooter.

"We would like to identify some large classrooms to at least try to enable some auto-locking capabilities," Shubert said. "We'd like to start with some of the bigger lecture halls and eventually get most of the large classrooms."

Shubert said the cost could be up to $10,000 per door, but it depends on the size of the door and how much modification would be necessary.

One concern Shubert said would not be a problem is using some of the city's money to help install the security systems.

"In case of such an event, and I hope there never is, the city emergency and county emergency respondents are going to be part of this thing too," he said. "During a response it's going to be more efficient and less costly [with the new system in place]."

The project still has a long way to go before anything is concrete.

"The university committed to come back with additional information when their presentation comes to the city commission in June," Assistant City Manager Lauren Palmer said.

There are several options available, but no particular company was selected to install the door-locking mechanisms.

"[The committee] didn't have any idea what the costs would be," said committee member Jeff Chapman. "They were asking for some start-up money for the program, but we weren't given much detail about any particular system or what system they were going to try to implement."

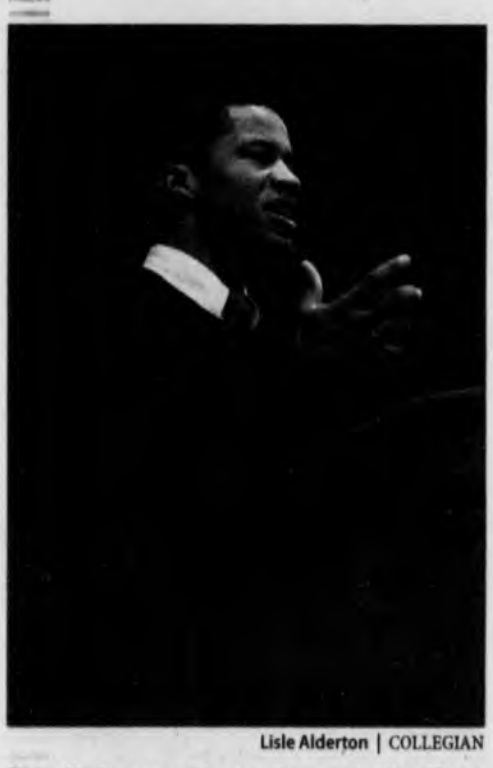
Purse snatched in O'Malley's



By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A purse was stolen in an Aggieville bar Tuesday night, according to Riley County Police reports.

Capt. Hank Nelson of the RCPD said Tamara Glase, 33, of Topeka, set her purse down on a barstool at O'Malley's Alley, 1210 Moro St., and left it unattended for about five minutes before realizing the purse was gone.

The estimated total loss for the purse and its contents, which included a two-carat diamond necklace, was $5,250, according to police reports.

Hollywood actor urges students to develop diverse relationships

Nate Parker, an actor in the movie the "Great Debaters" directed by Denzel Washington, gave a speech about campus diversity at 11 a.m. Wednesday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

By Clifford Watkins
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Without diversity, K-State and the world will be left behind in a changing world, a Hollywood actor said Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union.

Nate Parker, who plays the character Henry Lowe in the Golden Globe-nominated movie "The Great Debaters," gave students and faculty a taste of the red carpet as he spoke Wednesday in Forum Hall as part of K-State's Inclusion Week.

'THE GREAT DEBATERS'
Where: Forum Hall
Friday: 8 p.m.
Saturday: 7 and 9:45 p.m.
Sunday: 8 p.m.

As Parker prepared to speak to the small group of about 15 people, he looked up and said, "It's OK – I can introduce myself," as he stopped Wilson and her co-chair from taking the stage.

He used the same humble attitude that he used for his self-introduction to explain his destitute beginnings.

The actor explained that he grew up in Norfolk, Va.

"When I was growing up, sadly it was a very black-white place," Parker said.

Parker also said he attended a high school that struggled with poverty and a high drop-out rate.

"We were told that we were headed toward being a statistic," Parker said.

He used his very non-diverse hometown to contrast what diversity should be. The actor offered his own definition of diversity.

"Diversity is not color; it is a series of attributes that help you identify with people," he said. "Think of diversity as a tool box," Parker said as he explained that people need different attributes to be able to work with different people. "You need the right tools for the project."

Parker said he got his first taste of diversity while moving around a lot as a kid because of his father.

"I was an Army brat," he said. "I went to nine different schools from K-12."

He explained his first culture shock came when his father got stationed in Maine and Nate

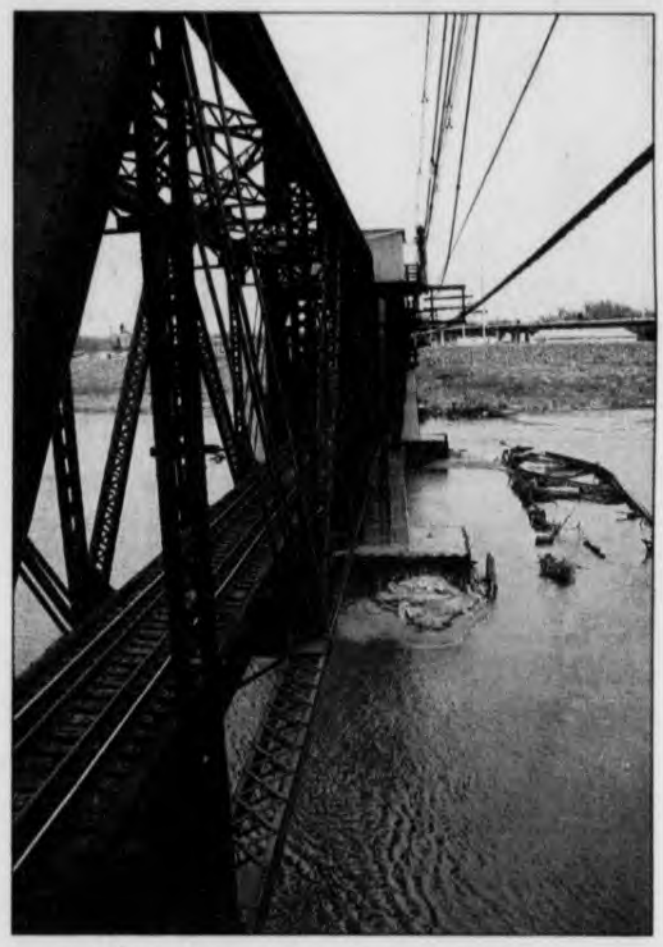
The Topeka Boulevard bridge in north Topeka was originally constructed in 1938 based on 1935 standards. In order to meet new standards and safety requirements, it is being reconstructed.

City, county ensure local bridges are safe

By Aubree Casper
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Simon and Garfunkel's famed song stories a "Bridge over Troubled Water," but after last year's bridge collapse in Minneapolis, Americans are wondering if the bridges might just be more troublesome than the water below them.

On August 1, 2007, rush hour traffic quickly became the least of the worries of drivers on an Interstate-35 westbound bridge in Minneapolis as their cars plunged into the Mississippi River. The collapse was caused by the corrosion of the outer shell of the bridge that carries more than 140,000 vehicles daily.



MSNBC.com also said the Minneapolis bridge last was inspected in 2005 when it was given a National Bridge Inventory rating of "structurally deficient" and given a near-failing score. However, the same bridge that concerned some officials since 1990 was left in place after being marked as meeting the very minimum requirements to continue normal function.

Less than a year later, questions remain across the nation about the safety of local bridges people cross every day. Fortunately, Kansas and Riley County seem to check out OK when it comes to public safety.

"Bridge Tracker," a feature on MSNBC.com allows users to check detailed safety reports of specific bridges, overpasses and ramps within 0.2 miles of any given route. Luckily, drivers traveling between Manhattan and cities like Dallas, Texas, St. Louis, Mo., and Kansas City all pass over bridges deemed safe by inspections, and more importantly, these inspections are completed on time.

The Minneapolis bridge collapse last year has sparked concern regarding bridge safety, putting bridges across the nation under close inspection.

U.S. death count in Iraq hits 4,000

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After five years of war, the U.S. death count in Iraq has surpassed 4,000 following a roadside bomb in south Baghdad that killed four American soldiers on March 23, according to the Associated Press.

With K-State being so close to Fort Riley, the realities and costs of war are close to home, said Nate Beeman, member of K-State Army ROTC.

"Obviously, it's heartbreaking, but at the same time a lot of people feel it's a cause worth fighting for," he said.

Beeman, junior in electronic media, said no matter the reason for war, soldiers in Iraq find motivation because of the opportunity to give freedom to a nation.

Beeman, who might be sent to Iraq upon graduation, said every time he hears about another casualty in Iraq, he finds comfort in knowing those soldiers fought for freedom.

"It just shows that there are heroes that are there fighting for freedom," he said. "It gives those of us [in the ROTC] something to aspire to.

"We have the common bond of wearing the same uniform. It helps a lot to know that you are fighting for a cause like freedom and that your buddy sacrificed their freedom to give someone else freedom."

According to the Associated Press, past wars have reflected death counts much higher than the war in Iraq. In Vietnam, the U.S. lost about 4,850 soldiers a year from 1963-75. In the Korean war, from 1950-53, the U.S. lost about 12,300 soldiers a year.

Fewer soldiers have died during the Iraq war because of better training and advanced medical and battle technology to protect them.

Deb Skidmore, public relations officer at Fort Riley, said as of Wednesday, 145 Fort Riley soldiers have died in the war.

Skidmore said there is one important message Americans should get from the 4,000 death-count milestone reached Sunday.

"We need to remember that freedom isn't free," she said. "Whether it is four or 4,000 deaths it's tragic when someone loses a mom and dad."

On campus, about 4,500 yellow and red flags, each representing one U.S. soldier who has died in Iraq or Afghanistan, line the sidewalks this week.

The flags go from the K-State Student Union to the quad area between Hale Library and Waters Hall and include the name, age and hometown of each soldier.The flags are grouped together by the soldiers' home states.

Alaska couple officially married in swimming pool

NIKISKI, Alaska — The cake was in the shape of a pool and the walk down the aisle was replaced by a zip down a water slide as Mark Confer and Joanne Wainwright took the plunge into marriage — literally.

The two were married Saturday in a swimming pool.

Instead of jumping in with both feet, they came whooshing around and down the pool's 136-foot slide. The couple then bowed their heads while Scott Coffman, senior pastor at College Heights Baptist Church, blessed their marriage. Confer and Wainwright are dedicated to physical fitness. Confer's passion is skiing, while Wainwright has swum competitively and coached high school swim teams most of her life.

"I always would tell my students if I ever got married in Alaska I was going to get married at the Nikiski pool," Wainwright said. According to its Web site, the enclosed, heated pool is open year-round and offers "excellent views of the surrounding terrain and wildlife."

On top of their pool-shaped wedding cake, the couple placed a tiny bride and groom coiled on the diving board, ready to dive in.

Chinese launching Olympic-themed lottery

BEIJING — China has launched an Olympic-themed lottery with prizes of up to 5 million yuan ($709,000), local media reported.

China's ruling Communist Party banned gambling after taking power in 1949, but state-run sports lotteries have become hugely popular since starting in the 1980s.

The Olympic lottery will include five sorts of games, covering all 28 sports in the Beijing Olympics, with tickets priced from three to 10 yuan, Xinhua News Agency said.

Donkey takes final bow at ballet troupe

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia (Reuters) — Russia's Mariinsky ballet has said farewell to one of its longest-serving artistes: a 21-year-old female donkey named Monika.

The animal is to be pensioned off after 19 years carrying the knight's overweight servant Sancho Panza around the stage in productions of the ballet Don Quixote.

The Mariinsky, previously known as the Kirov, is one of Russia's foremost ballet troupe.

At her farewell party, Monika danced a waltz with one of the Mariinsky's ballerinas and was presented with retirement gifts of carrot cake, a pinafore and a kerchief.

Her role will be taken over by a female donkey named Alina.

Dubai restaurant gives discount for bugs

DUBAI — A group celebrating a birthday at a Dubai diner were cheered by a 25 percent discount but not necessarily the reason: "Bug on food".

The restaurant cut the bill for seven customers at a birthday dinner after they found four insects crawling around their meals, the Gulf News reported on Tuesday.

"We were surprised when the receipt said 'bug on food' as a reason for the discount. I think they were trying to be funny," it quoted one of the disgruntled customers as saying.

"It was a misunderstanding from our side — the guys thought being friendly and having a joke about the environment would relax the diners because it was a birthday, but unfortunately it didn't," he added.

Interactive exhibit aims to teach students about Buffalo Soldiers

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Working in Willard Hall, Ruth Palao, graduate student in fine arts, works on her master's project on the history of Buffalo Soldiers. Palao created a variety of interactive projects to teach middle school students about Buffalo Soldiers, which are on display in the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union.

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ruth Palao's studio walls in Willard Hall are filled with clippings, pictures, games and photos from different museums. These are the artifacts she uses to create interactive projects to recapture history and find a way to capture young minds.

The graduate student in visual communications opened an exhibit Tuesday that teaches the history of the Buffalo Soldiers in an interactive way – featuring game boards and hands-on activities. Palao's interest in this topic is personal, because her great-great-great uncle was a Buffalo Soldier.

Palao was born in Texas but spent her childhood in a small village northeast of Mexico. At the age of 13, she moved to the United States. Before coming to K-State, Palao received a bachelor's degree in graphic design from Florida A&M University in 2004.

KEMPER EXHIBIT

The History of the Buffalo Soldiers exhibit is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays in Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union.

Buffalo Soldier is a nickname given to members of the U.S. 9th and 10th Cavalry Regiments of the United States Army by the Native American tribes they fought.

Buffalo Soldiers also guarded mail and built roads and railroads. The units were formed on Sept. 21, 1866, at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

While learning the facts, a child could color a paper medal of honor for a soldier or explore the timeline. A teenager can browse the Web site, which provides some information about Buffalo Soldiers, who were discriminated against because of their dark skin color, given sick horses and old equipment, but nevertheless, fought for the country.

"This exhibit is interesting. It gives basic information about Buffalo Soldiers for those who are not familiar with the topic," said Michael Goens, University Publications editor, who visited the exhibit.

While preparing her project, Palao went to Manhattan Middle School to speak with pupils to get the idea of what they really want.

"The reason why I chose the middle school kids as a target is because they are very inquisitive," Palao said. "This is one of the hardest audiences to please. When developing the project I had to keep in mind that every student learns differently."

She said she found children like history, but they are tired of just books.

"Books are the most common method of delivering information that most teachers use," she said. "But you can use something else besides books – something more interesting than just lectures and lectures."

Healthy Decisions unites campus organizations for a common goal

By Lacy Skinner

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Tina Griffin, food service coordinator at the K-State Student Union, talks about the benefits of hummus and eggplant during the "Healthy Decisions" initiative held throughout the K-State Student Union.

Human beings take simple things and make them complex when all they really need to do is keep things simple, said the speaker for the K-State Healthy Decisions Club kick-off event.

Dan Moore, president of Southwestern, a company aimed at encouraging and helping college students succeed by staying focused and setting goals, spoke to students Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

K-State organizations including Career and Employment Services, Academic and Career Information Center and Lafene Health Center gathered in one arena to show their support for helping students achieve the highest success in college in conjunction with the new student initiative to Healthy Decisions.

"Students are more focused if they have goals," Moore said.

If students want to achieve success, he said they need to utilize their "168 hours a week in pursuit of what they want to be."

By attending class and finding a quiet place to study from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., they will get the best grades imaginable, Moore said. Though grades do not constitute the success of a student, he stressed that "GPA is the snapshot of how they applied themselves."

Moore also encouraged regular sleeping habits because he warned that many students develop sleeping disorders – like sleep apnea – from bad sleeping habits. More importantly, Moore emphasized the significance of seeking help in college.

Whether physically, academically or mentally, students should become more aware of the various resources and services available to them on campus, he said.

Jamie Bauerle, member of Healthy Decisions, said the group strives to make students – especially second-semester freshmen and sophomores – better aware of the various services available to them so K-State can retain student involvement and have a higher graduation rate.

Healthy Decisions is more an initiative rather than a student organization that works with existing K-State organizations to help students, Bauerle, senior in human ecology said.

What inspired Bauerle and other members to start Healthy Decisions was the desire to make students more aware of the organizations on campus, encourage them to be more involved on campus and take advantage of the resources available to them like tutoring programs and Career and Employment Services.

"There is a stereotype that Healthy Decisions only includes physical fitness help, but Healthy Decisions focuses on every aspect of students' well being in order to be successful throughout their college careers," said Healthy Decisions member Sarah Tedford.

Olympics should be time for nations to come together

JESSICA HENSLEY

On Monday the ceremonial lighting of the Olympic Torch, a ceremony that should have been a symbol of international cooperation and unity, was marred by protesters and talk of boycott. Political figures all over the world have been calling for a full-scale boycott of the 2008 Olympic Games for the past few months, citing China's less-than-stellar record on human rights and recent crackdown on protesters in Tibet.

"There will be a boycott of some sort – what kind of boycott is the question right now," said European Parliament vice president Edward McMillan-Scott in an ABC News report. "At a minimum, I think the [European Union] should require that no elected official from the 37 member states attend the opening ceremony, but that is the minimum."

The decision of the International Olympic Committee to award China the 2008 Olympics always has been a source of controversy. The IOC rejected China's bid to be host to the Games in 2000, citing China's history of human rights abuses. As a result, Beijing's 2008 Olympic Committee championed an improved record on human rights as a major part of its bid for the Olympics in 2008. In its application, China pointed to Article 35 of the country's constitution, which guarantees that "citizens of the People's Republic of China enjoy freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, of association, of procession and of demonstration," as proof that China was serious.

"This Beijing Olympic Games will be a great event for people all over the world," said Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao in a recent press conference. He went on to say "the principle of the Olympics must be upheld – that is, the Olympic Games should not be politicized."

The Olympic Games should not be politicized. They should be above the pet causes of Hollywood, above national identities and the spread of political propaganda. The Olympics are supposed to represent a coming together of nations to celebrate the world's collective humanity. They are supposed to represent the fact that while we might be American, French, Japanese or Colombian, in the end, we are all citizens of the same world.

Thankfully, the United States has made its position on an Olympic boycott very clear.

"No. Absolutely not. No consideration is being given to a boycott," said U.S. Olympic Committee spokesman Darryl Seibel during an interview with ABC News. "There is no discussion. We would never entertain it. It's not on the table."

Still, discussion of possible boycotts, continues within the national governing bodies of various Olympic sports. And with only five months left until the opening ceremonies, such discussion will only get more heated. We can only hope that the national governing bodies that are contemplating an Olympic boycott stop to consider their athletes.

In the end, the Olympics are about the hopes, dreams and ambitions of the athletes, as well as those of the nations those athletes represent. And that is as it should be – the Olympics represent the dreams of individuals and the ideals of an entire world – such should be held far above the power plays of international politics.

Creativity, imagination lacking in technology

MARK WAMPLER

John Ottinger III, a literary teacher and book reviewer, reccently shared a story on his blog about people's lack of imagination.

"I asked a student yesterday, 'Why don't kids have much imagination these days?'"

I found his answer perceptive.

"'We have everything we need,' he said."

The blog went on to say that "as kids have things presented to them rather than having to create out of their minds, ingenuity is destroyed."

Ottinger is onto something. When people get bored, they go buy things. When people need something, instead of trying to make it on their own, they go buy it.

In 2006, the U.S. Census Bureau calculated the average family income of Kansans to be $44,000. Combine that with available credit, and you get a considerable sum of money that can buy a lot of items. But what kind of items do we buy? Any sociologist will tell you that people spend their money on the things they feel are important. If that is true, then America thinks that drinking water from bottles is absolutely necessary, which earth-policy.org estimates is a $100 billion dollar annual industry.

What that tells me is that we could spend our money in better ways. We just need the vision to see those ways – clothes for the homeless, food for the poor and child support for single parents are just a few ideas.

The reason we can't see this bigger picture is because, as a nation, we have collectively lost our imagination, and it shows in the activities we spend our time on.

How many people have "drinking" (probably not bottled water), shopping or watching sports as one of their Facebook.com hobbies? These things aren't necessarily bad, but if we never step outside this type of thinking, nothing will ever change.

In his book "Hobbies: Leisure and the Culture of Work in America," Steven Gelber said, "The belief in the medical efficacy of hobbies was so deeply embedded that an otherwise objective academic observer could boldly state in 1952 that a lack of hobbies is a very dangerous sign, and a man who loses all his hobbies should see a doctor about it."

I found this quote to be funny in its pronouncement of doom on boring people, but it illustrates just how far we have come in the last 50 years of TV and mass-consumer culture. It has been sweet to see the resurgence of knitting. Why don't we make gardening cool again?

Nick da Costa, one of England's most prominent creative advertisers, said even the entertainment community has seen a decrease of creativity and imagination in ideas.

"There is definitely something of a downturn in creativity, brought on in the way it is produced. We have advertisements that are essentially being derived from the MTV imagery," he said.

"What we have now is a well-polished surface – which is the image – but no real idea seems to exist at its core."

Finding kids to play with and talk to is a place where all youth who are stressed or bored can begin to get their imagination back.

As Picasso said, "All children are artists. The problem is how to remain an artist once he grows up."

I promise you it's still fun making action figures out of chicken nuggets and forts out of twigs and snow.

You might have seen my friends and me a couple Saturdays ago, handing out "green party water" and green cookies in Aggieville. We had a lot of fun trying to be creative by hanging out with people who we felt weren't making the most imaginative choices with their lives. The most common response we got was, "Wow, it's so cool you guys are doing this," like it was such an unusual thing to do. And I guess, considering the circumstances, it was. But how much creativity does it take to put food coloring in water and hand it out in cups? Anyone can do that.

Nate Schmidt | COLLEGIAN

Let the brave ones rekindle their imaginations and see that another world is possible.

TO THE POINT

Deaths should not be political firepower

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The war in Iraq conjures strong feelings and emotion from many on the left and right. The milestone of 4,000 American casualties in Iraq will be used by both sides as evidence to support their strong views.

It is good that many people are taking notice of how many soldiers have died serving their country, but unfortunately this occasion will be observed by both liberals and conservatives as fuel for a political agenda. Pundits and politicians will use these soldiers' deaths as reason for us to vote a certain way, instead of honoring the occasion with respect and gratitude.

The right will probably make a fuss about how the media are making too big a deal of the milestone while trying to convince the public that any discussion or criticism of the war somehow hampers our efforts. Similarly, many on the left will claim that the war was a mistake in the first place and try to blame these 4,000 deaths on specific individuals in the government.

Using the casualties in this way is blatantly disrespectful to the soldiers who are willing to protect our country with their lives and to those who already have given their lives for it. It is also ridiculous to deny the public a chance at serious, constructive discussion on the war.

We ask so much of our military servicemen and women, and they ask so little in return. The least we can do to repay them is to talk about the war in a civil and respectful manner and observe the 4,000-casualty milestone in the same way.

To the guy that is single and looking for a good girl: Don't give up, because we're still out there.

We smelly liberals of the Arts and Sciences College are here to make you conservatives squirm.

To the guy looking for a good girl: We're still out here, you just can't look for us at parties and bars.

Hey, ag kids: At least we know how to dress.

To those haters talking smack on Martin, Walker and Beasley: Why don't you do us all a favor and go enroll at KU?

So what's with the camera on top of Bluemont?

To the freshman who doesn't realize there's a turning lane in the middle of Manhattan: Well, just so you know, there is.

Wanted: A girl who has money and likes sex. Respond to the Fourum.

I would just like to say that I love the College of Agriculture. They give me Call Hall milk.

My horn is an idiot detector.

To the guy that sits next to me in my 7:30 math recitation: Stop staring at me.

To the person that left the note, "Learn how to park on the street" on my car: I do know how to park, but I got a ticket for parking within three feet of an alley and driveway last time, so I made sure not to do that this time. Thanks.

Great job, whoever decided to paint all the intersections leading west of campus and close them down to one lane. Great job. How ridiculous.

To the guy in the white Mustang with the blue racing stripes: You're really hot, and thanks for letting me go in front of you.

Iraqi poet to speak Friday

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dunya Mikhail's poetry is known for revealing the reality of wars and their effect on Iraqi people, and on Friday the award-winning Iraqi poet will read some of her poetry at K-State.

Mikhail is an Iraqi Arab-American who was born in Baghdad. She sought asylum in the United States after being threatened by the Iraqi regime and accused for writing rebellious and controversial poems in 1996. She will read at 3:30 p.m. in Hale Library's Hemisphere Room.

Mikhail received her master's degree in Near Eastern studies from Wayne State University in Michigan and her bachelor's in English literature from the University of Baghdad.

K-State student, Lamees Al-Athari, said Mikhail most likely will read from her book "War Works Hard," which is about the second Gulf War and the effects of the war aftermath.

As a graduate student in English literature, Al-Athari – also an Iraqi student – became interested in Mikhail's work while working on a thesis paper on Iraqi literature.

Al-Athari had the opportunity to go to Michigan and personally visit with Mikhail and gain more knowledge about the author and her work. After her visit, she introduced the idea of bringing Mikhail to K-State to faculty member Greg Eiselein.

Eiselein, professor of English, said he was captivated by Mikhail's work.

"One of things that Mikhail does is let you see the war – not just the current war but also the first gulf war of the 1980s," he said. "She lets you see the war from the perspective of women who weren't soldiers but often had to deal with the aftermath of war."

Eiselein – along with the Department of English, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Women's Studies Program, the K-State Student Government Association and the Creative Writing Program – sponsored the event and said Mikhail's work is engaging to everyone.

"I think it'll be emotionally powerful," he said. "I think these poems are pretty hard-hitting, and it's not a poetry reading that's going to bore anybody."

Organizers deem conference a success

By Whitney Hodgin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Saudi club invited students to "Discover the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia" at the first K-State Saudi Conference on campus Tuesday and Wednesday.

The club was host to several speakers, a photography display and a traveling museum exhibit set up in the K-State Student Union, all designed to bridge the knowledge gap between American and Saudi Arabian culture.

The club was responsible for inviting Prince Turki Al-Faisal to campus during International Week last April and has continued its efforts to promote diversity at K-State since then. Ali Aljouf, club president and graduate student in civil engineering, said he was pleased with the results.

"The conference was great," Aljouf said. "Thanks to the attention we got from K-State and President Wefald, and the funding from OSAS, it was a huge success."

Presentations for the conference depicted Saudi Arabia as a country much different from what many students expect. "Saudi Arabia in the Eyes of its Friends" featured what life as an American living in Saudi Arabia is like. Other presentations covered the education system, health development and the social and organizational development of the country.

"We have more than just oil, camels and deserts," said Nassar Aldossary, a member of the club's organizing committee and junior in electrical engineering. "One of the biggest goals for this exhibit was for the K-State Saudi culture to understand Americans and for Americans to understand Saudis. It was a really good experience."

Nanotechnology development was a big topic of discussion during a lecture on "The Industrial Experience in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia," delivered by Dr. Abdulrehman Almuhanna. Almuhanna encouraged the audience of mostly Saudi students to apply as researchers to the King Abdulaziz City for Science and Technology, located in Saudi Arabia, to gain real-world experience and to contribute to their society.

"Our mission is to ensure the kingdom is a major player within the international community in the research and development of nanotechnology," Almuhanna said. "Someone has to do it, and you are the next generation. You have to do more than get good grades – you have to understand the system."

Almuhanna said the institute has purposefully left spots open specifically for women to fill when the topic was questioned by Dr. Ahlam Al-Rawi, a former director of K-State's women and engineering program.

"We wanted to know if women are going to be a part of that system," Al-Rawi said. "And not just as faculty members, but as researchers too. It's nice that they have a certain number of spots just for women."

Almuhanna said KACST is more concerned with qualifications than with gender biases.

K-State has more than 120 Saudi Arabian students, and with the success of the first Saudi Convention, the conference director and senior in finance Naif Alhawwas is optimistic about the future.

"This is a start to a sequence of more Saudi involvement on campus," he said. "These conferences added significant value to the existing relationship between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and K-State."

Senate to vote on resolution to support smoking ban in bars

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will vote on a resolution to support a "smoke-free Manhattan" tonight. If passed, a copy of the legislation will be sent to various city officials and President Jon Wefald to demonstrate Student Governing Association's support of a smoking ban.

The purpose of a smoking ban is to protect workers and customers at bars and restaurants where they might be exposed to secondhand smoke. A decrease in business is one effect of a smoking ban that bar owners might be concerned about, but according to the agenda, peer-reviewed studies show such laws do not have a negative effect on the hospitality industry.

"I hope that the bill passes," said Student Body Vice President Lydia Peele. "A lot of the [student senators] I've talked to were in favor of us passing this resolution, so I hope those people have gone out to talk to people in their respective colleges so they can make the right vote."

This isn't the first time a smoking ban has been proposed in Manhattan, but last year it died when it got to the City Commission.

"I think it will definitely be up to us to take a proactive approach to the issue and not let it die down," Peele said. "A lot of our cabinet members have already talked to city commissioners."

A resolution to support Internet neutrality is also on tonight's agenda. The resolution, if passed, will encourage Internet providers not to charge users for accessing specific Web sites or content. Charging for access to individual Web sites would cause poor or no service from those sites, according to the agenda.

Another resolution recognizes cadets serving in the U.S. military. According to the agenda, the resolution was inspired by events that occurred in New York City when an explosive device was detonated in an empty military recruiting station.

An increase in student-health privilege fees will be reviewed as an item of new legislation tonight. The increase is to compensate for an increase in the minimum wage and for an increase in the student pay-scale.

A little humor is added to the agenda this week, as one of the pieces of new legislation includes the approval of euphemisms of the other Big 12 schools. Some proposed euphemisms include calling Iowa State University "the red headed step-child" and calling Texas Tech "the smart little brother."

K-State baseball team cruises in 11-1 victory against Creighton

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wednesday night was cold and windy at Tointon Family Stadium, but the weather didn't affect the K-State baseball team as it crushed the Creighton Blue Jays 11-1.

Wildcat starting pitcher A.J. Morris helped jumpstart K-State's momentum by easily putting the Jays down in order in the top of the first inning.

Morris (2-1) got the win, pitching five plus innings and allowing just one run on seven hits.

He also struck out two batters while allowing only one walk. Morris helped the Wildcats improve to an 11-11 season record.

Coach Brad Hill said he was proud of what his team was able to accomplish against a solid Creighton squad.

"They fought off pitches, and they're going to fight you," Hill said. "I thought A.J. did very good for us."

The bottom of the first started smoothly for Creighton starter Joe Bonfe, but after the first out, Bonfe struggled the rest of his outing.

Bonfe got the loss and fell to 1-2 on the year. Creighton dropped to 15-7.

Two straight walks led to the first run of the game on an RBI single by first baseman Justin Bloxom.

Immediately following a walk to junior third baseman Nate Tenbrink, right fielder Jason King cleared the bases with a long grand slam to right field to put the Wildcats ahead 5-0.

King said he got a hold of the ball pretty well but didn't think it was going to make it over the elevated fence in right field.

"I hit it pretty well," King said. "But I didn't think it was going to make it because it was going into the wind."

King's grand slam was the first by a Wildcat batter since Rob Vaught belted one last year against the Texas Longhorns.

The four-run homer gave K-State momentum, and the Wildcats kept the bats warm throughout the whole game. They ended up with three home runs and 16 hits.

"That's what we were looking for offensively," Hill said. "Hitting can be a contagious thing. We were extremely focused."

Bloxom was one of several K-State batters who found success while at the plate, as he had four hits and three RBI on the night.

He said he was expecting the Wildcats to succeed.

"A.J. came out and dealt and we got it going with walks," Bloxom said. "Hopefully we can keep our confidence up and keep it going."

The Wildcats have one day off before taking on the Oklahoma State Cowboys in a three-game home series beginning at 6:30 p.m. on Friday.

Coach Hill said he is looking forward to the Cowboys series and he thinks the Wildcats intangibles could help them during the weekend series.

"We've been working extremely hard," Hill said. "We'll continue to play hard."

K-State sports 2 NBA Draft hopefuls

MICHAEL BEASLEY

Key Stats: 26.2 ppg, 12.4 rpg, 28 double-doubles.

Average Draft Projection: Consensus No. 1

Best Case Scenario: Chosen as the first pick of the draft

Worst Case Scenario: Fall to second pick

Reasons to Stay: Contend for national player of the year and help Wildcats contend for Big 12 Conference title and national title. Become one of the greatest college basketball players ever.

Reasons to Go: Money, risk of injury, 2008-09 NBA Rookie of the Year?

Conclusion: Beasley has accomplished a lot in one season at K-State, he should show what he can accomplish against the best.

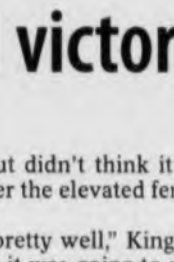
BILL WALKER

Key Stats: 16.1 ppg, 6.3 rpg

Average Draft Projection: Late first-second round

Best Case Scenario: Sneak into middle of first round

Worst Case Scenario: Go undrafted



Reasons to Stay: Become the focus of the K-State offense and develop a more consistent perimeter game.

Reasons to Go: Walker has had two knee injuries already. If he has the chance to be drafted in the middle of the first round, the guaranteed money might be too much to pass up.

Conclusion: NBA scouts will be looking closely at Walker's knee injuries whenever he decides to go, but his NCAA tournament performance showed how dominant he can be and raised his draft status.

Royals provide entertainment between football, basketball

The time between the last buzzer of K-State basketball and the opening kickoff of football season can only be filled with one thing – Kansas City Royals baseball.

MIKE DEVADER

The 2008 Royals begin play at Detroit on Monday with the first pitch set for 12:05 p.m.

During the 2003 season, the Royals were in first place in the American League Central with about a month to go. They blew that lead, and ever since, fans haven't had the opportunity to be excited about rooting for a potentially good team.

Fans could be surprised by the team taking the field in less than a week.

Normally, the Royals are picked to compete to get out of the cellar of the division, but this year expectations are a lot higher with seasoned first-year manager Trey Hillman.

It's not hard for a manager to think of loftier goals when the organization he will take over has had only one winning season the last 15 years.

The perception of Royals baseball is quite comparable to the men's basketball program before Bob Huggins took over. Both teams were looked at as just filler games on the schedule, but with Huggins changing the whole mentality of the university toward the basketball team, the team played better because they had a coach with fire.

Huggins left for West Virginia, and coach Frank Martin took over the Wildcats. Martin's passion for his players and the game helped K-State get to the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1996. K-State is now a legitimate contender in the Big 12 Conference and not a cupcake anymore.

Hillman brings the same kind of fire to Kansas City.

Hillman isn't threatened by how much work he'll have to do to make the Royals successful because he isn't used to losing. He came from Japan, where he managed the Hokkaido Nippon Ham Fighters since the 2003 season, turning a historically unsuccessful franchise into a perennial contender. The Ham Fighters made the playoffs three of the five seasons under Hillman, winning the Japan Series title and Konami Cup in 2006.

The Royals will win under Hillman.

Just like the Wildcats, who got to the second round of the Big Dance, the Royals come into the new season young and unproven. The young guys like Alex Gordon and Billy Butler aren't going to know everything about how to succeed in the Major Leagues this early in their careers, but that mentality is what could make the Royals a dangerous team this year.

Kansas City has the right mixture of veteran talent and young sluggers who just love playing the game, which could make them a surprise contender for the AL Central crown in 2008.

The benefits of breakfast

Many students do not get a nutritious breakfast because they favor extra sleep as opposed to waking up early to prepare food for breakfast.

Nutrition professor suggests easy breakfast ideas

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many students, breakfast is not an option because it takes too much time to make, and they would rather get a few more minutes of sleep.

Though waking up early for breakfast or spending time making a meal might be a burden, many say breakfast is the most important meal of the day.

Mary Meck Higgins, human nutrition associate professor, said studies have shown people who eat breakfast are less likely to have weight problems.

"[Eating breakfast] helps the munchies, and people don't get as ravenous," Higgins said. "Eating smaller meals helps people lose more weight because they are not starved and don't eat whatever they feel looks great. People who are not eating breakfast aren't nourishing their brain, so it is easier talking themselves into eating anything."

Packing items the night before could help students eat something in the morning, she said.

Higgins recommends at least three or four different foods from the food groups.

"A good reason [for eating breakfast] is mental performance is enhanced – people stay awake and remember better," Higgins said. "People that eat breakfast get more nutrition throughout the day, and it helps to stay off munchies throughout the day."

Many people do not want to get up earlier, thinking breakfast is complicated and involves utensils instead of smaller on-the-go meals, Higgins said.

"[I encourage students to] be creative with what they consider breakfast and don't think traditional," Higgins said. "Eating something would be better than not eating anything."

Stephanie Davis, member of Sensible Nutrition and body image Choices, said the group works to promote healthy eating habits for middle school children through college adults.

She said the group has presentations to show students the importance of incorporating a breakfast into their diet and what items make quick, to-go meals.

Incorporating protein into a meal is important because it gives people energy, especially for the morning, Higgins said.

"Breakfast is important because overnight metabolism slows down, and with breakfast, it kickstarts the metabolism for the day," said Davis, senior in family studies and human services.

Leah Tanking, senior in nutrition-exercise science, said breakfast is a very important meal of the day for her because without breakfast, she cannot concentrate.

"I eat breakfast right when I get up each morning," Tanking said. "The brain fuels off glucose from your breakfast."

Tanking said she thinks most college students say they have no time for breakfast or they do not want the calories. Though those are common excuses for not eating breakfast, she said students should just grab something small.

"It is not hard to grab an apple or banana and take it to class – or a healthy granola bar," Tanking said. "You can run around and eat a banana or a little snack if you don't have time to eat it at a table."

EASY BREAKFASTS

LEFTOVERS
"I encourage they eat what they had for supper the night before, because it's the quickest thing to do," Higgins said.

FRUITS
Fresh fruits like bananas, oranges and apples are easy to take along on the way to class.

BREAD/BAGELS
Sliced bread or bagels are good for on-the-go breakfasts. Bite-size cereals can be good for students on the run, because it is ready-to-go and does not crush easily, she said.

BEVERAGES
Including a beverage like milk or fruit juice is good for a person in the morning.

'Lumberjack' band bases music on sounds of nature

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Upon arrival at the interview site for members of Jack Timber, they were gathered around a controlled fire outside their apartment. The setting was almost perfect in describing the sound and feel of the band.

Nature always has influenced the members of Jack Timber in its song writing.

Guitarist Andrew Sellers said the band's music has a mountain or cabin sound to it, while keyboard/vocalist Scott Chaput, describes the music as "Clint Eastwood."

Sellers and Chaput have played music together since high school, having started in 2001. After moving to Manhattan, the two became involved in the band Emma's Mine.

"We had an Emma's Mine show in Salina, and the other members couldn't make it," Sellers said. "Scott and I felt obligated to play because it was a big show. We decided to play it with songs we had written, under the name Emma's Mine Magic Carpet Ride. We liked it and wanted to keep doing it."

Emma's Mine broke up shortly after the show, and since Sellers and Chaput were roommates, it was an easy transition, Chaput said.

The name Emma's Mine Magic Carpet Ride did not last long, and after searching through MySpace.com, they came up with Jack Timber.

"It started, and we wanted to do a lumberjack theme, and MySpace had some

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Columnist suffers lousy spring break

So how was Manhattan last week?

ADAM REICHENBERGER

I'll tell you what I told my English class when asked for a summary of the story we were supposed to read: On Monday night the lead singer of Rascal Flatts bought my friends and I a couple rounds to drown out the vision of the old woman who thought it was a good idea to keep flashing us all night.

Obviously I hadn't read the story, and needless to say I had no idea what was requested of me when the teacher pointed me out and yelled, "Go!" My gut instinct was to pull the bottom of my shirt up over my face and run out screaming, but I suppressed that urge.

Spring break in Manhattan was awesome ... actually it sucked. But that wasn't really Manhattan's fault; she tried. I was sick all week. Actually, I've been sick the past three weeks and even some now. So, I wasn't really up for anything that involved exiting my bed.

My dogs were in town, and for all their glory and all their wonder, they're really nothing more than a great big pain in my butt. I love them to death, but seriously, it was too much. Within the first 90 minutes, they had broken down all the barriers I set up, crapped in my bedroom and peed in the stairwell.

I'll assume it was Paul that took the dump, because it was spaced out pretty far, and he's the only one dumb enough to keep walking while, well, you know.

Aside from the dogs, a few other friends were in town. My good friend Grant from Lawrence stopped by for a few days, and my friend Liz had a couple German girls in town.

We tried to make the most of it. Grant told us all about his new film project he was working on. I "didn't get what [he] was going for." What is it with KU students? It's never real with them. Why can't the barn just be a stupid barn?

On Monday night, we did go out, and an old lady did decide to flash us eight times. For my part, I can gladly say I never witnessed it, but my friend Amanda, that poor girl, saw every one of the sinister 16.

Soon enough, the little waitress who stole all our quarters on Friday came over with a couple trays of beer. Following her was some tool asking us about Country Stampede. I laughed in his face. His "bodyguard" sat down to inform us that his friend was the lead singer from Rascal Flatts. Apparently, we were supposed to be impressed. He then proceeded to insult us with such names as "weak" because we hadn't finished all the beer yet.

I stood up and said to him, "Look guy, I've been called a multitude of things throughout my life, but weak?" I pulled up my sleeves and flexed the guns at this point. "Weak is one I've never argued."

We ended up at Porter's later where Grant and the Germans danced the whole night, complete with him sliding on his knees and all.

We'll probably never know if he actually was the singer of Rascal Flatts, but if he was, I'm glad I laughed in his face and told him his music sucks. What a tool.

I guess my week wasn't all that bad.

After an experiment gone wrong, Lou develops the power to steal a person's life force and, in a dastardly quest for immortality, becomes the supervillain, "The Hourglass." With unimaginable strength, unbelievable speed and deeply uncomfortable tights, will the Dragonfly be able to stop the sands of The Hourglass and save the world? More importantly, will we stop laughing long enough to notice?

Museum curator recalls historic pieces, discusses love for apparel fabric, colors

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many people think about clothes only as they dress themselves in the morning. Marla Day spends her career thinking about fabrics, costume design and their histories.

Day, senior curator for the KSU Historic Costume and Textile Museum in Justin Hall, developed an interest in apparel and textiles as a child when she learned to sew from her mother.

"I just had this sense of design and creativity," Day said. "I would see something in a magazine, and I would go to mother's scrap bag and recreate it. There were always these creative juices flowing."

As senior curator for the museum, Day manages a collection of more than 15,000 pieces that community members donate. After a committee of apparel and textiles faculty members review the possible museum pieces, Day interviews those who donate pieces about their histories, issues a condition report for each piece and catalogues them.

Wearing a delicate pair of clean white gloves, Day opened drawers and recalled historical contexts about items like Chinese golden lily shoes from the 1880s and a young boy's Scottish dress from 1858.

After Day's youngest child started kindergarten, her husband encouraged her to go back to college. Her husband, Dwight Day, is an associate professor of electrical and computer engineering at K-State.

Marla Day started her career as a nontraditional student at K-State with one course a semester so her family could transition into her academic life and its demands. Near the end of her undergraduate career in 1995, Day interned with 12 other people at the now-defunct MGM Grand Adventures Theme Park in Las Vegas.

Day said her most interesting and unusual project was assigned at Halloween time. She had to create a Marie Antoinette costume where a fake arm "hugged" the actor's head.

While she had taken many art classes like Figure Drawing, Day said she had no sculpture experience – with the costume, she had to sculpt a costume that extended beyond the wearer's actual head and create the illusion that the head had been cut off.

"It was almost an engineering feat," Day said.

Because Day only had exposure to costume pieces in history museum and design classes, she said she pursued an honors program that researched Chinese silk embroidery and symbolism.

She painted about 30 scarfs and presented an exhibit in Justin Hall where she paired her scarfs with the original Chinese garment that had inspired her artwork.

Day said she learned about the appreciation of another culture and the artistry that is involved with creating calligraphy, which is an artistic form of cursive handwriting. She said the Chinese brushstroke is a beautiful technique that required concentration in its recreation.

"Whenever I would sit down to paint, I couldn't do it in a rushed manner," Day said. "I had to relax and think about what I was painting."

While Day studied for her master's degree in the late 1990s at K-State, she developed a historic costume tutorial that helped students learn different silhouettes and the history of costume design.

"Being able to identify them helps students understand what the next influence or trend might be," Day said.

Madeleine Vionnet, a French fashion designer who died in 1975 and has been called "the architect among dressmakers," is Day's favorite designer. As Day flipped through pages in "Survey of Historic Costume," she described her appreciation of Vionnet's work.

"She always emphasized the linear in her designs," Day said. "Maybe it's because I'm tall, but I love how she always emphasized the line."

Day experiments with color in her own dress choices. She said she loves iridescent fabrics, which she displays with her green and blue iridescent earrings and necklace and violet glasses.

As an extension associate in textiles with K-State Research and Extension from 1999-2004, Day presented "Dress for Success" lectures with students and faculty members. Personal apparel is a strong form of communication with other people, Day said.

"Everything that you do – or don't do – communicates to others," she said. "So, what do you want your message to say?"

BRIDGES | City plans to repair most bridges

sioner Bob Newsome said the recent fear of bridge safety "really is not an issue" in this area.

Newsome said states are mandated by law to inspect bridges every two years, which is typically what happens.

The Bridge Tracker also supported this information as only 693 out of the 25,258 bridges in Kansas were not inspected on time.

States like Hawaii and Rhode Island had nearly half their bridges past due for inspection.

Manhattan City Engineer Robert Ott said this year is an inspection year for Riley County bridges, and June 1 is the date "punchcards" or lists of deficiencies in local bridges will make their way into planning for the upcoming year.

While the bridges in Manhattan are watched over by different government sectors – from the city to the Kansas Department of Transportation – the procedures for inspecting them is the same.

Ott said local consultant firms are hired to inspect the bridges.

Local government agencies are involved, but the most efficient way to carry out inspections is to have these firms produce the final report because they have more experience and expertise.

Ott said keeping track of bridges is like balancing a checkbook.

He said he does not see the sense in falsifying inspections or failing to have them done because, like a checking account, "it is better to know when things are bad" and fix them as quickly as time and money allow.

It could be about 20 years before all Riley County's bridges are expected to be improved or replaced. Because of budgeting and manpower, it would be impossible to move any faster, Newsome said.

A special committee also meets to evaluate bridges in Manhattan and Riley County and uses the findings to determine which bridges are of higher priority and repairs them as soon as they possibly can.

Bridges over Wildcat Creek near Fort Riley Boulevard, South Manhattan Avenue and two on Anderson Avenue are undergoing some renovations and replacements.

These improvements are occurring on a carefully planned timetable decided by maintenance personnel, city engineers and other officials.

Manhattan and Riley County Web sites show approximately $700,000 is spent working on bridges and keeping drivers and residents safe each year.

Though residents are in safe hands when driving around Kansas, questions or concerns regarding the bridges in Riley County can be directed to 785-537-6330 for Riley County Public Works, 785-587-2415 for Manhattan City Public Works or to any city or county commissioner.

DIVERSITY | Students hear actor's advice

was forced to attend a predominately white school. He used school and college as an important reference point for diversity.

"College orientation was like my first time riding a bike without training wheels," Parker said.

The graduate of the University of Oklahoma was the only African-American on his college wrestling team, so Parker is not a stranger to a lack of diversity on the university level.

"When people first met me in college, I could tell they were thinking, what kind of black person am I going to be?" he said.

Parker also praised the advantage of going to college instead of going straight into the work force.

"When parents ask me about their kids wanting to be actors, they usually ask me, do I think it is a good idea for them to go to college?" he said.

He explained in his answer that his college experience helped him with his acting.

"College gives you a transition to life," Parker said.

He used a quote from Stedmen Graham to explain why people who come from their hometown out of high school tend to "stick to the script."

Instead of keeping the same mentality people grew up with, Parker said they should step out of their comfort zone.

"In college you are forced to interact with other cultures," he said. "It helps you go outside the script."

Alex Wilson, Union Programming Council multicultural committee co-chairman, said UPC sponsored Parker's visit because he relates to students.

"We thought he would bring an interesting dynamic on diversity and inclusion from a young perspective," Wilson said.

Students thought Parker's speech could benefit the K-State community.

"This was something the campus needs to hear – especially the males," said Careem Gladney, senior in finance. "I was definitely affected by what he said about being a role model. I want to impact my peers."

Gladney was not the only student who took guidance from Parker's message.

"He got me thinking about how I should have more diverse people around me in my social life," said Toni Wilson, sophomore in social work.

"Diversity involves compromise and adjustment – not assimilation," Parker said.

Parker was not shy about saying whether K-State needs diversity.

"I believe it does," he said. "We need diversity to navigate in a changed world. Without it, we are going to

IRAQ | Group hopes to remind students

The week is organized by the K-State Alliance for Peace & Justice. The group also has been playing the audio recording of Martin Luther King Jr.'s speech, "Why I Oppose the War in Vietnam."

Jeff Stilley, president of KAPJ, said the purpose of the flags is to remind students of the human aspect of the war.

This is the second year KAPJ has had a flag memorial on the K-State campus. Last year, KAPJ put up only yellow flags representing Coalition soldiers killed in Iraq, about 3,500 flags at that time.

Edgar Martinez, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said he was shocked when he found out the flags represented deceased soldiers.

"As a student, I am just in and out of classes, and it's hard to take time to pay such close attention to everything that is going on in the war," he said.

"Honestly, I have mixed feelings about the war. I think we need to be over there, but the number of people we have is just ridiculous."

JACK TIMBER | Group to record new songs

lumberjack names already, so I put two words together," Chaput said.

The band recently added two members to increase the depth of its sound – drummer John Shank and bassist Andrew Elliot.

Sellers said the old sound was more instrumental, ambient and folksy.

"It was just Andrew and I, and we thought we wanted more instruments, but you add two more people and that will change the sound," Chaput said of the new band members.

Sellers said the group has a special relationship with the community.

"Manhattan has a good, close-knit music scene like certain venues," Sellers said. "Also there is a nice music scene that everyone comes out and supports."

Immediate plans for Jack Timber include recording an EP with four or five songs and playing more shows before Shank moves to Prague, the group said. From there, members said they are not sure what will happen in the future.

Mixing energy drinks, alcohol common despite health risks

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ryan Fritz likes to bartend for himself sometimes. Often while he's at home, he will mix different combinations with alcohol in hopes of discovering an alternative drink he will enjoy.

"I like to try new things," Fritz, senior in finance, said. "Usually I'll just see what I have on hand and mix it to see if it tastes good."

One cocktail Fritz said he craves from time to time is a Jager Bomb. The drink combines one shot of Jagermeister and half a can of Red Bull.

However, he said he most often mixes alcohol with pop because it's cheaper. A four-pack of Red Bull costs about the same as a 24-pack of Coca-Cola Classic.

Fritz is just one of many college students who enjoy energy drinks. About 30 percent of people between the ages of 18-24 consume energy drinks like Red Bull or Monster, according to 2006 Market Research Insight data. About 10 percent of that group consume five or more energy drinks in a month.

But not everyone is enthusiastic about energy drink cocktails. The combination can cause a lower perception of intoxication, heart complications and dehydration.

However, many students are not worried about that information.

"If you're concerned about your health, you probably shouldn't be drinking alcohol in the first place," Fritz said.

Teacher faces sex charges

By Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan High School teacher was arrested for allegedly having sexual relations with a 17-year-old male student.

The 32-year-old teacher, Katherine J. Harder, was a language arts teacher and was in her third year of teaching at Manhattan High. She resigned early Thursday morning, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal.

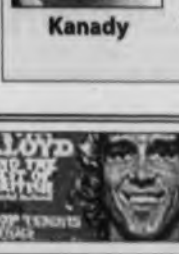
No information has been released on the 17-year-old other than that he is a student at Manhattan High.

A Pottawatomie County Sheriff's deputy found the two in a parked car in the Spillway Marina Park area of Tuttle Creek Dam at about 10 p.m. Wednesday. Harder was released on $3,000 bond, according to the Manhattan Mercury.

Students enroll with iSIS

By Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students might have noticed a difference on the K-State Web site when navigating their personal information.



Before February, students would click the "KATS" option to view their classes, enroll and see their DARS report. Now, students click on a "KATS/iSIS" option where parts of their information is on both systems.

By Feb. 22 all administrators will be able to begin utilizing DARS through iSIS and no longer will have access to it through KATS.

iSIS will be phased in fully by fall 2008, at which point KATS will be removed completely.

Though many alterations are coming to KATS, students still will be able to use their eID and password for iSIS.

Have you used iSIS? What do you think about it?

"Yes. I just thought it was really convenient to use. I like how you can push the back arrow and it doesn't take you out like KATS."

Liquor store's trademark Budweiser horse pushed off roof

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN
A fiberglass Budweiser original Clydesdale was pushed off the top of Rickel's Liquor on Thursday morning sometime between 1:45 and 2:08 a.m.

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A life-size Clydesdale horse statue was shoved off a Manhattan liquor store roof early Thursday morning, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

Sometime between 1:45 and 2:08 a.m., suspects climbed onto the roof of Rickel's Liquor at 1129 Bluemont Ave. and pushed the statue from the top of the building, said RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup. According to the report, the horse was fastened to the roof with four tie-downs and lag screws. The horse was described as fiberglass Budweiser original Clydesdale merchandise. Moldrup said the business reported $3,000 of damage.

Monica Rickel, liquor store clerk, said the RCPD called her father on Thursday morning to let him know the horse was on the ground in front of the store. Rickel said the horse had been a landmark for their store.

"When someone called for directions to the store, you always said the one with the big horse on top of it," she said.

Rickel also said the store's roof suffered damages because the tie-downs were pulled out of the top of the building. After Rickel's father reported the original $3,000 price of the horse to the police, he decided to call Budweiser for the correct amount. Rickel said since Budweiser stopped making the horse, the value price has increased to $10,000.

Currently, the Rickels are trying to fix the horse and get it back on the roof.

"We have had drunk people on the roof sitting on the horse, but never trying to pull it off the roof," she said. "It's pretty sad people would do something like this."

In another RCPD report, a 19-year-old K-State student lost $9,540 in an online scam. Josh Drummond, sophomore in mechanical engineering, sent the cash to the alleged Silverson Evaluation and Marketing Services company. Moldrup said Commerce Bank was also a victim of the crime because it processed the check.

Sarah Peacock performs in final Union lunchtime lounge of semester

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A free iPod give-away was enough to tempt some students into the Union Courtyard for the last lunchtime lounge concert of the semester.

The concert, which featured classic rock-'n'-roll singer Sarah Peacock was the last of the concert series. The Union Program Council will now devote most of its time to planning the Spring Fling.

Ben Hopper, UPC adviser, said it just happened that Peacock was in the area. She performed Wednesday at Johnson County Community College and called Hopper to tell him she was in the area.

Hopper said Peacock performed last spring in the courtyard, so this was not her first time to sing at K-State.

Originally, Hopper heard about Peacock at a national convention for colleges where attendees listen to many different types of new artists. After hearing her music, Hopper gave her name to the music committee at UPC.

Peacock doesn't have many tour dates lined up after the end of the week, said Sara DuBois, friend and professional colleague of Peacock.

"She is playing at the Kathouse Saturday night," said DuBois. "Then it's home to Atlanta on Sunday."

Peacock recently finished recording a CD that is now in the marketing and producing phase of production.

In addition to the free concert, students were given the chance to enter a drawing for a free iPod and iTunes gift card.

"I came to win the iPod, but after I heard the first song, I decided to stay," said Daniel Mick, senior in wildlife biology.

Mick, who sang with Cadence for two years, said he knows how hard it can be to sing in the courtyard and appreciated Peacock's effort.

"The acoustics are not very good in here," Mick said. "The ceilings are so high it just drowns out the sound."

Mick and Dubois agreed that Peacock had a good voice, but both were unable to describe it easily.

"She can do everything with her voice," Dubois said. "She's all over the map."

Mick said he could not come up with a comparison for Peacock's voice, but he did say he liked her sound.

Senate supports city smoking ban

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A resolution that would support a city-wide smoking ban in Manhattan was passed last night during the weekly Student Senate meeting.

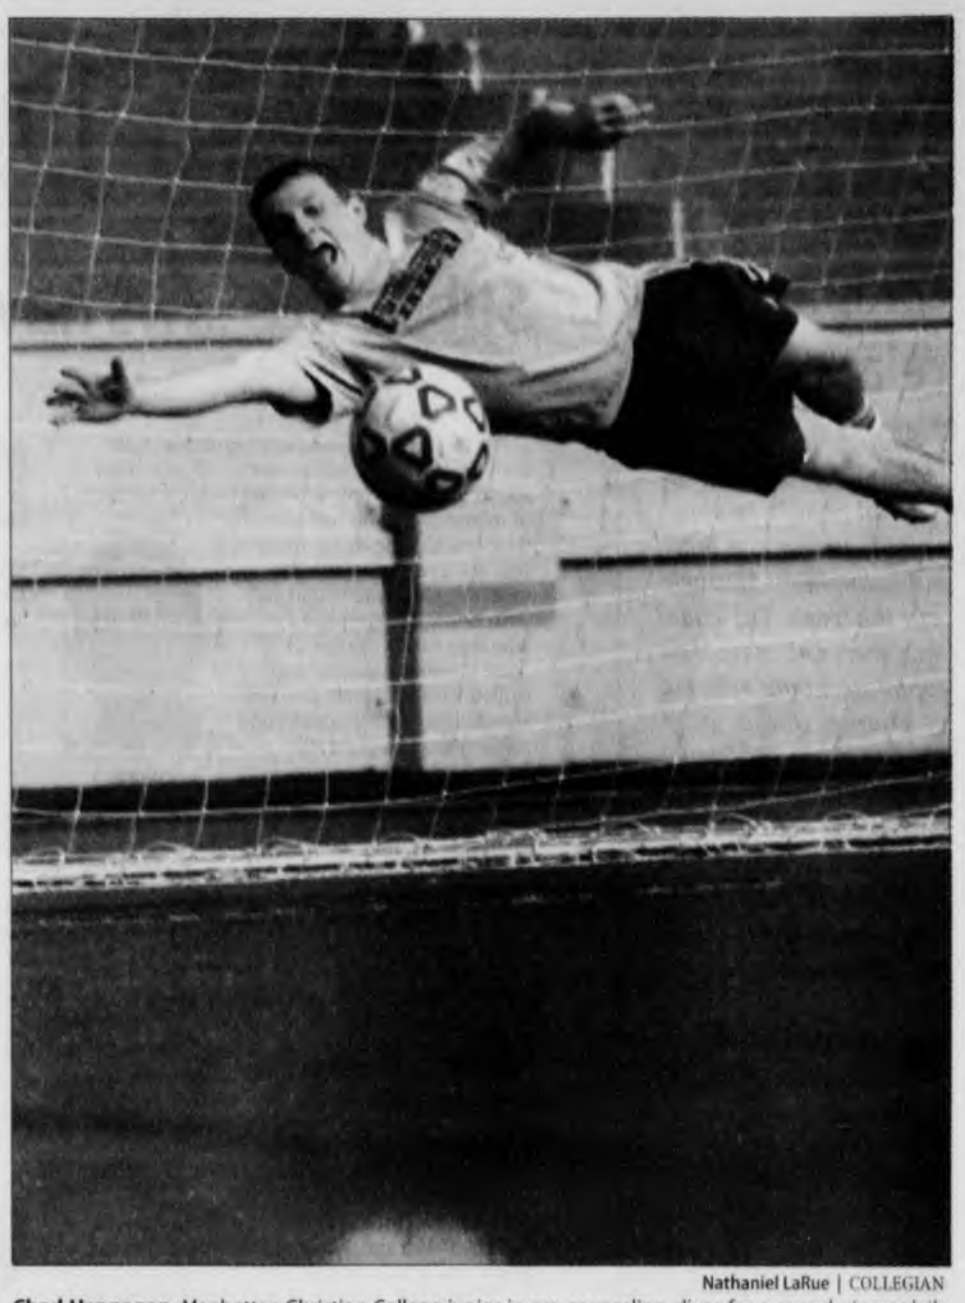
An amendment was offered by Faculty Senate Representative Tim Weninger, graduate student in computer science, to change the resolution's intent to support the ban of smoking to "most" instead of "all" workplaces and enclosed public buildings at all times. The amendment failed after a show of hands.

Larry Fadler, as well as a few other senators, spoke on the negative for the unamended resolution. Fadler, senior in management, said it was not a general consensus of the student body because there are many students who don't want an absolute ban on smoking. The resolution passed 38-6-2.

Students For the Right To Life applied for an allocation months ago and it was denied on the grounds of a lack of educational value. A new allocation to reimburse them for their trip to Washington D.C. for a March For Life event was proposed last night. The allocation was voted down 13-34-1 for the same reasons.

Student senators heard complaints from representatives of the Physics Department because they were no longer included for funding from the Student-Centered Tuition Enhancements. The department used their previous funding for a physics help room to help any student taking a physics class.

Student Body President Matt Wagner spoke on the negative for an amendment to include a physics help room in the funding.



Wagner, senior in management information systems, said SCTE's funding is for new innovative programs and to help programs that don't receive funding from any other source. The physics help room received its seed money already and has been phased out, which is why it should not receive further funding. The amendment failed and the fiscal year 2009 student-centered tuition enhancements bill passed as it was originally presented without the amendment with a vote of 39-7-1.

Next week, senators will vote on an increase in student health privilege fees. The legislation will add $6,300 to a more than $200,000 increase already planned. The additional money will help compensate for an increase in minimum wage and an increasing student payscale, according to the agenda.

Telefund produces great results, student volunteers

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The annual K-State Telefund has raised more than $1.3 million this year and expects to raise even more throughout the year, said Jeff Pfannenstiel, director of Telefund.

"Our goal is typically to meet or exceed the previous year," he said. "We didn't have a formal goal in mind. When it's all said and done and all the pledges roll in, we'd like to be close to $1.65 million."

The Telefund operates through the K-State Foundation, with 1,524 student callers from Jan. 27 through March 2. These students represented the university's nine colleges and called their respective department's alumni to ask for pledges.

Student volunteers also were entered in a drawing for prizes, which will be given away April 19 in Bosco Student Plaza and the K-State Student Union. The grand prize winner will receive a 2008 Nissan Versa, and

Collegian addresses campus feud, relationships

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

Hey, to the other eight colleges at K-State: We were here first. If you don't like it, you can leave. Love, the College of Agriculture.

The Collegian has no beef with the College of Ag. We like to eat juicy cheeseburgers just as much as we like to read a good newspaper. Let's cease the battle and commune.

Fourum, I'm sorry I cheated on you 15 times over spring break. I'll take you out to a nice pizza dinner to make it up.

The Fourum does not make spring break booty calls, but the Collegian would love free pizza!

To the two making out in the Hale Library stacks: That was hot.

We hear there are wild stories about sucking face in the stacks, but we've never actually seen it happen. So did you have an audience or was the poor soul walking by a victim of your foul play?

To the guy that is single and looking for a good girl: Don't give up, because we're still out there.

To the single guy probably living in his parents' basement playing with his Wii: Maybe if you were involved on campus, you would find quality girls.

Drug craze

Substance laws have purpose, but boundaries needed

OWEN KENNEDY

Drug laws in this country and this state aren't perfect. Law enforcement officers often spend too much time arresting nonviolent users of minor drugs and not enough time cracking down on drugs that are a real problem. But most drug laws are sound and reasonable, which might be why they rarely change. But there is one category of controlled substance laws that has very little to do with controlled substances: paraphernalia laws.

The term "drug paraphernalia" usually brings to mind images of brightly colored glass pipes and bongs, and these are considered such under Kansas law. Items like this are usually purchased at "head shops" that specialize in appealing to the recreational user at least they used to.

Last year, Kansas outlawed the sale of drug paraphernalia, which is defined as any item or material used in the "planting, propagating, cultivating, growing, harvesting, manufacturing, compounding, converting, producing, processing, preparing, testing, analyzing, packaging, repackaging, storing, containing, concealing, injecting, ingesting, inhaling or otherwise introducing into the human body a controlled substance," according to Kansas statute 65-4150.

Also, according to the Drug Enforcement Agency's Web site, possession of paraphernalia is illegal under federal law.

These laws seem appropriate since drug users need a method to ingest drugs, but illegality by association is ridiculous. Someone possessing a marijuana pipe has done nothing to harm society. But pipes are illegal because there is suspicion that the possessor will someday use the pipe for illegal purposes.

When the government oversteps its bounds, a small, harmless piece of glass becomes a criminal offense. Someone who has never used an illegal drug could buy paraphernalia and be arrested for it. Even if this person has a stellar record, the pipe he or she bought is illegal. Even if there is no criminal intent or desire, the person is a criminal.

But tools for ingesting aren't the only evils in the law's eyes. Anything used to weigh, store or conceal drugs is illegal. So a scale could be considered illegal, as could a plastic baggy, or a balloon, or a wired cigarette paper. Most people possess these kinds of "paraphernalia," yet some can do so legally and some can't. Letting the government choose who can own plastic bags or balloons is a dangerous road to tyranny.

Look at this from another perspective. Possessing matches or a lighter is legal; possessing gasoline is legal; but arson is not. Drinking alcohol is legal; driving a car is legal; but impaired driving is not. Just because people have tools to break the law doesn't mean they will.

The intent of these laws might be in the right place, but that doesn't mean the laws are correct. Law enforcement should try to stop the import and sale of drugs – specifically drugs that hurt and kill people. No one has ever become addicted to glass pipes; people do not go through withdrawal when they haven't used a scale in a while.

I am not encouraging the use of illegal substances. I am encouraging a government that knows its boundaries and respects its people's liberties. Drug paraphernalia is not a drug itself. You might have paraphernalia in your house or with you right now. I don't care, that's none of my business nor is it the government's.

Economic stimulus doesn't help students like it should

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Many people breathed a sigh of relief when the federal government announced earlier this year that the IRS will be handing out economic stimulus checks to taxpayers in order to help the lagging economy.

A plan with this scope doesn't come without some confusion, though, as many taxpayers were unsure whether they would receive a stimulus check. According to the IRS Web site, www.irs.gov, eligible citizens must have "a valid social security number, $3,000 of income and file a 2007 tax return." Parents who also have children younger than 17 will get $300 extra for each child they claim on their 2007 tax return.

While it might seem that many K-State students are about to receive $300-$600 checks from the government beginning May 1, that is simply not the case. The IRS stipulates that if a person can be claimed as a dependent on someone else's return, then he or she is not eligible for the stimulus check.

However, there is one exception possible for graduating seniors. The IRS stipulates that "you may be able to claim the [economic stimulus] credit on your 2008 tax return, but you will not receive the advance payment this year, since it is based on your 2007 return." So if students can file as independents for their 2008 tax returns, they might eventually receive their share of the stimulus plan.

Whether a student eventually receives the tax credit from the economic stimulus plan or not, the government should re-consider its guidelines when deciding who gets credit. College students are a valuable force in the economic market and definitely need extra money, as many students are technically living at the poverty level. The U.S. Census Bureau Web site states the 2006 poverty threshold for a single individual is an income of $10,294 or less annually.

Many students, working part- or full-time, contributing to the economy with their own money every day, should be eligible to receive a stimulus check. After all, college-aged students have about $200 billion in buying power annually, according to an article written by Rebecca Gardyn in the November 2002 issue of American Demographics.

Gardyn also states, "The average college student has about $287 to spend on discretionary items per month, or about $3,444 per year. Overall, students spend more than $11 billion a year on snacks and beverages, $4 billion on personal care products, and $3 billion on CDs and tapes." This 18 to 29-year-old demographic is a market that the government should want to target.

College students have discretionary income that can be spent on items that would stimulate the economy. The majority of students usually aren't saddled with mortgages, extremely high credit card debt or children. Hopefully, in the years to come, students will be recognized as equally worthy of some help as others living around the poverty threshold trying to make ends meet.

SGA, police address bike safety on campus

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association's Governmental Relations Committee is working in conjunction with the K-State Police Department to create awareness about bike safety.

Dena Bunnel, Governmental Relations member and senior in political science, said she wants to create more awareness about bike safety on campus because it has been an issue heard among students.

"As far as safety between pedestrians and cyclists, not a lot of incidents were reported, but we have heard about kids being hit or almost hit," Bunnel said.

Governmental Relations is working with the campus police to install new bike racks and also to revise the literature about bicycle rules, she said.

"We want to make information available, particularly to incoming students, so we can catch them so they know what they are supposed to be doing before they do it wrong," Bunnel said.

Many people park their bikes in the wrong places, like near handicap entrances or on handicap rails, she said.

"We want [bicyclists] to know what is right so they can act according to the regulations set by K-State," Bunnel said.

Governmental Relations inspects bike lanes to see if they need to be repainted or if any changes need to be made. Bunnel said as of now, no actions have been taken for bike lanes.

"I think this is an important issue to address, because with the parking structure being worked on, there has been an increase of people bicycling," Bunnel said.

Capt. Donald Stubbings of K-State Police said for safety matters, campus police are encouraging students to wear helmets, buy quality locks for their bikes and register their bikes with Parking Services.

Stubbings said cyclists need to obey the same laws as vehicles. Bicyclists need to be on the road not on sidewalks, except if there are designated paths.

He also said those riding bikes should be aware that running stop signs can cause accidents and they need to stop for people at crosswalks on campus.

"People have conflicts with people on bikes who fail to stop at the crosswalks," Stubbing said, "though there have been no major injuries with people on crosswalks between bicyclists."

People should be aware of the dismounting zones located on campus. One of the main dismount zones is located in the area between Hale Library and Waters Hall commonly known as the Quad.

"There are bikes lanes in some areas of campus so if they see a dismount sign it is there for a reason, it is there for safety, and they should walk with their bike in those zones," Stubbing said.

"If people fail to obey the laws of bicycling whether on campus or in the city streets, the police can issue a citation for the violation they commit," Stubbings said.

Sebelius, other officials meet to discuss climate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. – Governors from around the country will meet at Yale University next month to review state programs to combat global climate change and develop a strategy for future action.

Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius will attend the event, which takes place April 17-18 and also marks the centennial of President Theodore Roosevelt's landmark 1908 Conference of Governors. That gathering launched the modern conservation movement and planted the seed for the National Parks System.

Sebelius will be accompanied at the conference by Govs. M. Jodi Rell of Connecticut, Arnold Schwarzenegger of California, Jon Corzine of New Jersey, and Christine Gregoire of Washington. Canadian Premier Jean Charest also will be present. A dozen other governors are exploring whether their schedules will allow them to participate.

The chairman of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, (Nobel Laureate Dr. R. K. Pachauri), will address the gathering.

Annoyed users hope to end constant invites

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Facebook.com has 30,542 members who belong to the Kansas State network.

On April 1, that might change. A Facebook group called "Official Facebook Petition: To ban the inviting friends on applications" was created by Adam Werlinger, a student from Columbia University, to protest the use of applications on the Facebook Web site.

The Facebook network gives people, often students, an opportunity to stay in touch with friends at different schools, to view photographs and to see what activities are going on in the area or around the school.

Numerous applications invite users to be added as friends and applications to go along with it. When users view a profile of a friend or other user, it becomes a bit overwhelming because of all the applications on the page.

"Some of the pages look cluttered," Ashley Wessel, junior in marketing, said.

Jonathan Scott, junior in marketing, said he checks Facebook at least twice a day and receives invitations often.

"I don't pay much attention to the invitations," Scott said. "I ignore most of them."

According to the petition group's profile, it has 1,040,638 members to ban the invitations and applications. The plan is to have as many people as possible contact Facebook and share their views about the Web site and their frustration with the numerous applications. Scott said the number of members in the group gives supporters a legitimate chance to see change.

Denise Heideman, junior in art education, said she has had a Facebook profile since her freshman year of college and has thought a number of times about deleting her profile because of the applications and invites she receives when she checks her profile every three to four days.

"People can choose whether or not they want to be on Facebook," Heideman said. "[The invites are] annoying."

Whether the petition succeeds, Wessel said she does not have strong feelings either way.

"I wouldn't cry if it got deleted," Wessel said, "but it's a fun distraction."

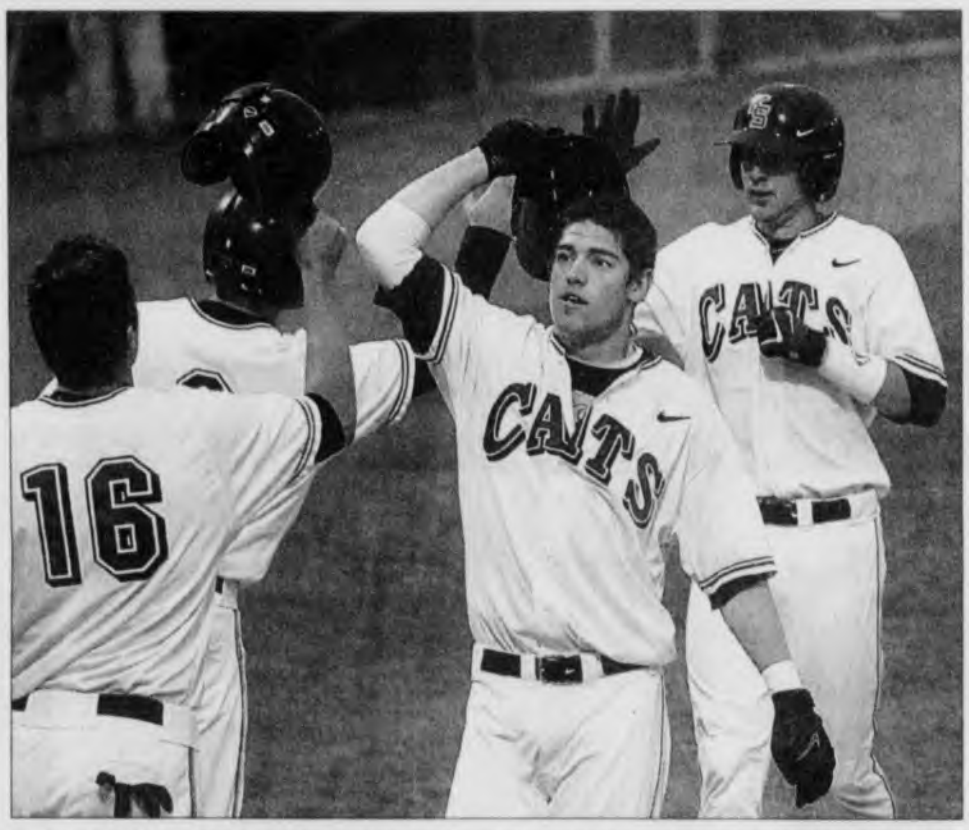
The Wildcats are going into their 3-game weekend series with Oklahoma State on the heels of one of their biggest offensive outputs of the season. K-State scored 11 runs and had 16 hits against Creighton Wednesday.

Wildcats hope to extend streak

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will be host to the 16-6 No. 22 Oklahoma State Cowboys in a three-game series this weekend at Tointon Family Stadium. Trying to keep a four-game winning streak alive, the Wildcats will have to play some of their best baseball to keep up with a team that's also playing at a high level.



Wednesday night, K-State easily defeated the Creighton Blue Jays in front of more than 1,000 purple-clad fans 11-1. This matched the highest run total of the season for the Wildcats, and set a new mark for hits in a game with 16. More importantly, with the offensive explosion, it might have set an offensively struggling team into forward motion.

"A lot of people did good things tonight, everyone stayed within themselves, took good swings and we were extremely focused offensively. Now we just need to find that consistency to make this happen more often," coach Brad Hill said after the victory.

Wildcat fans might have been surprised to see the way their team attacked Blue Jay pitchers all night, but it didn't come as any surprise to the players.

"That's how we play. All through the Fall World Series that's how we played. We haven't been playing to our ability, but that's how we like to play," said sophomore first baseman Justin Bloxom.

The 11-11 Wildcats will face a Cowboy team that matches K-State's four-game winning streak with two victories each over No. 22 Texas A&M and No. 8 Arizona. Oklahoma State is an offensive juggernaut that sits at the top of the Big 12 Conference in four key offensive categories, including batting average, slugging percentage, home runs and RBI. Senior pitcher Brad Hutt will get the first chance at the Cowboys.

The Wildcats take on Oklahoma State in this weekend's 3-game series. This will be the first time this season the Cats have faced the Cowboys.

"Oklahoma State is an extremely talented team offensively. You know you're going to see great hitters when you face them," Hutt said.

So far on the season, the relief pitching has been one of the most consistent parts of the Wildcat baseball team. Senior All-American and returning first-team All-Big 12 pitcher Daniel Edwards already has tied the school's all-time saves record with 18. Transfer Lance Hoge has been effective in his role as a middle reliever, striking out 16 in just 15.2 innings of work. True freshman Justin Aragon has yet to surrender a hit to an opponent, and lefty Thomas Rooke has picked up three victories for the Wildcats out of the bullpen, which leads the team.

"We have to go with what we do best," Hill said. "You start pitching defensively and you're going to make more mistakes. We're going to stay aggressive and attack within the strike zone. If we don't do that, then that's where they'll hurt us."

Optimism high as tennis team prepares for weekend

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the K-State women's tennis team (5-7, 1-2 Big 12 Conference) is in the middle of a two-match losing streak, there is still a considerable amount of optimism about the direction the team is going heading into this weekend's matches.

The team will compete against Oklahoma State on Friday and Oklahoma on Saturday. Both matches begin at 1 p.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility at the Peters Recreation Complex.

Coach Steve Bietau said he saw many positives in the matches against Iowa on March 19.

"We were encouraged by the competitiveness of the Iowa match," Bietau said. "Vivi [Yrureta], Antea [Huljev], Katka [Kudlackova], Tasha [Vieira] and probably someone else played well. It was the most consistent effort we've seen this year against one of the more quality opponents."

In the 6-1 loss to the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 43-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes, the Wildcats improved from the efforts that led to a shutout loss to Colorado. Against Iowa, Bietau shuffled the team's doubles line-up.

Senior Olga Klimova and Kudlackova, a junior, remained in the No. 1 position. In the No. 2 position, Yrureta, a senior, was paired with Vieira, a sophomore. For the first time since the Syracuse match on Feb. 2, Huljev and Vanessa Cottin, both freshmen, formed the team's No. 3 doubles team and garnered the team's lone doubles win. Bietau said the line-up alterations have yet to be completed.

"We're going to switch the No. 2 and No. 3 doubles team for this weekend and see what happens there," he said. "Other than that, the singles line-up will remain the same."

Oklahoma State (6-5, 0-2) will enter Friday's match fresh off a 5-2 victory over Wichita State.

The Wildcats defeated Wichita State 5-2 on Feb. 12. Senior Iryna Tkachenko, who boasts a 6-5 record this season, leads a small roster of Cowgirls. Injuries have forced Oklahoma State to forfeit several matches this year.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

After a two-match losing streak Coach Steve Bietau said there is still a considerable amount of optimism going into this weekend's meets against Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

On Saturday, the Oklahoma Sooners (7-6, 0-2) will come to town; the Sooners fell to TCU 1-6 on March 22. The doubles team of senior Chelsea Orr and freshman Ana-Maria Constantinescu leads Oklahoma with a 10-2 record.

"To be successful this weekend, we'll need to get an extension of the Iowa performance with more clear focus and a more competitive attitude on each court," Bietau said. "We'd also like to see more people playing to where they're capable of."

Huljev noted that attitudes are good, and the Wildcats are ready to finish the year strong.

"The attitude is better-we're hardworking now," she said. "We don't have a lot of time for conditioning, but we're fit, and we're trying to do better, and it is going better. Having eight more Big 12 matches gives us a lot of motivation."

After this weekend's matches, the Wildcats will wrap up their five-match home stand against Texas Tech on April 4 and No. 2 Baylor on April 6.

"If we get our act together in doubles, we have a chance to finish really strong this year," Bietau said.

Wildcats regularly tease fans

JOE BERGKAMP

For the casual K-State fan, the sports season is all but over, save baseball season. This year brought success that fans were not accustomed to seeing.

The men's basketball team accomplished things that hadn't been seen in more than two decades. Frank Martin and company landed the country's No. 1 recruiting class, headlined by freshman phenom Michael Beasley winning a slew of awards including national Player of the Year awards from several different news services.

They won a NCAA tournament game for the first time in 20 years, they finally beat archrival Kansas in Bramlage, and they won double-digit conference games in back-to-back seasons for the first time since 1975-76 and 1976-77.

It was a great year for women's basketball as well, with Deb Patterson's Wildcats going from worst to first in the Big 12 in one season.

The football team was able to go to Austin, Texas, and pick up its second win against Texas in as many years, and Jordy Nelson became the first Wildcat All-American since running back Darren Sproles in 2003.

You could weigh the athletic department's success against many other programs and say that it was a great year for the Wildcats. There's no arguing the accomplishments this year were great for all those teams, but it was merely typical of what K-State has done in the past.

The great Michael Scott, of NBC's "The Office," once said, "...and it feels like somebody took my heart and dropped it into a bucket of boiling tears ... and at the same time, somebody else is hitting my soul in the crotch with a frozen sledgehammer ... and then a third guy walks in and starts punching me in the grief bone." Anyone who has cheered for K-State knows exactly what message Steve Carell's character is trying to get across.

Each team did its share of dashing hopes for K-State fans this season. You could call it a bad break for any of the sports but it just goes with past tradition. In the men's NCAA basketball tournament, the Wildcats knocked out No. 6 USC in one of the most-hyped game of the first round, building up optimism for a tournament run, only to lay an egg on 0-for-13 three-point shooting in the second-round loss against Wisconsin.

This letdown has been a reoccurring theme for the football program, which even goes back to the great Bill Snyder's powerhouse teams of the late 1990s. The first major letdown came in 1998, when the Wildcats let a big second-half lead get away against underdog Texas A&M and ended up in the Alamo Bowl, only to play unmotivated and flat football which led to another upset. It was an undefeated regular season that ended in a 0-2 postseason record for arguably the most talented team in K-State football history.

The same happened again in 2003 but with the roles reversed. Ell Roberson and Darren Sproles led the Wildcats to a rout of the No. 1 Oklahoma Sooners. The prize for that upset was K-State's first BCS game. They didn't show up, though, and Ohio State took full advantage of it early, going up 28-7. Granted there were some extenuating circumstances surrounding that game, but it played right into line with past performances.

The K-State women's basketball team won a WNIT Championship in 2006. What's the best way to follow that type of season? A 12th place finish in the Big 12 in 2007. This season, Patterson put out a team that really overachieved and ended up winning the Big 12 regular season title outright, only to have senior guard

Women's golf team heads to Arizona

By K-State Sports Information

The K-State women's golf team is Arizona-bound this weekend as they'll play in the Mountain View Intercollegiate in Tucson, Ariz., on Saturday and Sunday, March 29-30. Play starts each day at 9 a.m. with shotgun starts.

Seniors Michelle Regan and Kali Quick had top-20 appearances the last time out, and the Wildcats will look to add solid scores to that to continue their history of success in Tucson. Live scoring will be available at www.golfstat.com for all three tournament rounds.

The Mountain View Golf Course at Mountain View Country Club is a par 72, 6,178-yard course in Tucson, Ariz. Designed by Gary Panks, the course was built in 1997 and has hosted the Mountain View Intercollegiate since 1999.

The Wildcats hold a 7-30 record against the Mountain View Intercollegiate field. East Carolina is Golfweek's highest-ranked team at 21, with Louisville not far behind at 27. Of the nine Big 12 teams in the tournament, Oklahoma has the highest ranking at 40. Every team in the field is in Golfweek's Top 100.

The K-State women's golf team landed two players in the top 20 and finished the Betsy Rawls Longhorn Invitational at the University of Texas Golf Club at 88-over par 664. The Wildcats shot a 329 on Monday before Tuesday's round was canceled due to poor weather conditions. Led by seniors Kali Quick and Michelle Regan, K-State fired a 335 in its final round.

Quick brought home her fourth top 20 of the season by finishing in a tie for 13th with four other individuals. She carded a pair of 79s to finish at 14-over par 158. This marked Quick's first top-20 finish this year where she didn't place in the top five as well. The senior was just one stroke from a top-10 showing and two strokes from finishing in the top five.

Regan also finished in the top 20 for the fourth time this season. She shot 83-76–159 (15 over) for the two days and landed in a tie for 18th.

K-State has enjoyed its fair share of success in the history of the Mountain View Intercollegiate tournament.

The Wildcats won the team title in the 2002 tournament with a two-round total of 597. K-State has also had two individual winners of the Mountain View. Elise Carpentier won first in 2001 with rounds of 70 and 75. Then, in 2003, Christine Boucher brought home individual honors with a three-round total of 217.

Track team travels to California to face different competition

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend's Nike Challenge in Sacramento, Calif., will give the track and field team a chance to face unfamiliar competition, as the Wildcats often compete in regional events against many of the same teams.

ROVELTO

"One of the things that's good about getting the opportunity to get farther away is we're going to see teams and athletes that we don't see very often, and I think that's nice," said track and field coach Cliff Rovelto. "If you're competing regionally all the time, especially in our sport, then you're basically running against the same teams week in and week out."

The Wildcats will face Oregon, Washington State and California-Berkley from the Pac-10, as well as Sacramento State, which is hosting the meet, and several other schools from around the country.

"We just don't see those teams hardly ever outside of the national meet," Rovelto said. "It's rare that we compete against them. It is just good to see some new faces."

Senior high jumper Lamar Garrett said the meet will feature several talented jumpers, which he said will help prepare the team for facing the top jumpers in the Big 12 Conference later in the season.

The Wildcat sprinters also will have their hands full in the meet.

"In the Pac-10 you see these unbelievable 4x400 teams and these unbelievable sprint teams," Garrett said. "It's amazing to see that level of competition."

Junior sprinter Mike Myer said it will be different competing farther from home against new teams. He said he is usually familiar with the people he is running against.

"It's kind of a new experience," Myer said. "You run against people you don't know. You don't know how they're going to run. You just have to worry about yourself and not worry about what other people do."

This weekend's meet will only be the third time the Wildcats have competed outdoors this year. Last weekend the Wildcats competed in Tempe, Ariz., in the Baldy Castillo Classic, which provided the Wildcats with an opportunity to adjust to the heat and different conditions outdoors. The Nike Challenge offers the same opportunity, Rovelto said.

Like the meet in Arizona, the Nike Challenge also will give several Wildcats the opportunity to get back into competition. A handful of athletes, including Garrett, did not have indoor eligibility and could not compete with the team during the indoor season.

"I'm excited," Garrett said. "I was counting down the weeks until I could compete again."

This weekend's meet also is a chance for many Wildcats to adjust to new events. Outdoor competition offers fewer medium distance races, Rovelto said.

One of the major changes from indoor to outdoor season is the throwing events. Instead of the weight throw, athletes compete in the hammer throw outdoors, and the discus and javelin events are added.

Rovelto said he does not expect the throwers to struggle to adjust.

"Other than getting out and just getting used to being outdoors and throwing the different implement, they are pretty much ready to go when the outdoor season starts, as evidenced by some of their marks by the first couple of meets," he said.

FANS | Cats must remain positive

Kimberly Dietz go down with a career-ending knee injury in the first half of their opening round Big 12 Tournament game.

You could even draw a tangent to the age-old slogan that Chicago Cubs fans have had for years: Wait til next year. The only problem with that is it might be dangerous for K-State fans to think that way.

You could say that not being able to finish strong is due to recruiting, coaching, injuries, or location, but maybe it just isn't in the cards for the Wildcats, and maybe it never will be.

It's tough to say, but one thing is for sure: being a K-State fan is nothing short of a struggle.

A positive, however, is the way it has fueled the passion that K-State fans have. It's probably a stretch to call us the greatest fans in the country, but we're definitely not lacking for passion.

Whatever the case is, let the taste of success, however small it may be, keep us cheering for the purple, no matter the end result.

Angry break-up music fun for workouts

Angst-ridden breakup music and an hour at the gym share a common bond: These tunes offer a fun alternative for the earbuds while getting into shape.

ADRIANNE DEWEESE

The following five songs provide more than 20 minutes of awesomely depressing tunes for a workout mix. Listeners' caution: Try not to pout, frown or glare too much while sweating and releasing pent-up anger from your latest relationship-gone-wrong.

"Breakin' Up" by Rilo Kiley

"Ooo! It feels good to be free!" Frontwoman Jenny Lewis' high-pitched vocals during the chorus are simply too catchy and upbeat – don't be surprised if you catch yourself bopping along and singing after one listen to "Breakin' Up." Men, beware. This song is intended for women only with lyrics like "Here's to all the pretty girls you're going to meet." Skip ahead, and please see the next track for your male equivalent.

"Love Me Dead" by Ludo

Ludo is well known for its quirky, creative story-telling lyrics. "Love Me Dead" has received significant radio play recently, and it's easy to understand listeners' appreciation for a love-hate relationship. Because of its relatively mellow tones and Moog synthesizer effects, "Love Me Dead" makes a great warm-up or stretching song. Feel free to snap and whistle along when appropriate.

"Makes Me Wonder" by Maroon 5

With a funky beat and Adam Levine's distinctive vocals, "Makes Me Wonder" carries two meanings in its words. Levine penned the song about his frustration with the state of politics and the U.S. role in Iraq. The second meaning, more simply, is about love. The song also is multifunctional for different workout interests and preferences – laugh, and have a good time with this one.

"Dance Floor Anthem (I Don't Want to Be in Love)" by Good Charlotte

Forget lifting weights or riding the elliptical bike with this track – throw your hands up in the air and dance like no one is watching. If you're self-conscious about working out in public, pull up the "Dance Floor Anthem" music video via YouTube.com, crank up the volume and dance around your living room like there's no tomorrow (just make sure your blinds are closed tightly).

"Disintegration" by Jimmy Eat World

Known mostly for its sappy emo lyrics, Jimmy Eat World surprised avid fans with "Disintegration," a dark track from the band's 2005 EP "Stay on My Side Tonight." The better half of the song features frontman Jim Adkins repeating "Lie/Lie/Stay on my side tonight." For those who enjoy a long, slow jog around a track or park, "Disintegration" is a seven-minute-plus song that provides a steady rhythm.

TRENDS THROUGH THE DECADES

Trends from the 1970s still prevalent

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Doese the return of high-waisted pants, feathered hair and anti-war songs make you feel like you're living – or re-living – the 1970s? That's because we almost are, said associate professor of apparel, textiles and interior design Deborah Brosdahl.

History has been known to repeat itself, and one can see numerous influences from the '70s prevalent in today's style and music. But nowhere is the disco era resurgence more apparent than in the fashion world.

Disco music and dancing became a significant fad during the 1970s, as shown with John Travolta in the Movie "Saturday Night Fever" which was released in 1977.

FASHION

"The 1970s is basically where we're at right now in fashion," Brosdahl said. "Almost all of the [current styles] are from the '70s. It's the major trend area right now."

She said that every time fashion is repeated, designers make the styles new and not a complete throw-back by altering construction or details but keeping the basic design.

Brosdahl suggested students watch iconic TV shows from the '70s like "Charlie's Angels," "Miami Vice," and "The Brady Bunch." She said these shows displayed a lot of fashion, and students should be able to easily identify clothing, hairstyles and accessories that are still popular.

Some of these popular trends include empire waists, A-line skirts, vivid patterns, wide-leg pants and chunky necklaces for women and patterned pants, button-ups with longer-pointed collars and polo shirts for men.

"Fashions repeat because, in between anywhere from the 30-40 years out, people don't really appreciate what has happened in the past," Brosdahl said. "Then you get a whole other generation in that hasn't worn or hasn't seen [the trends], so it's fresh and new."

HAIR AND MAKE-UP

Wida Egan, clinic floor supervisor for Crum's Beauty College in Manhattan, said there were two types of trends in the 1970s – the disco look and the natural or Bohemian look.

The disco look included bright colors, glitter and metallics, which she said can be seen in make-up trends today. But perhaps the most prevalent make-up comeback, she said, has been the use of blue eye shadow.

The flip-side to the disco look of the '70s was the Bohemian look, Egan said, which offered soft, neutral and barely there make-up techniques. These also have been extremely popular with celebrities and designers in recent years.

Out of the Bohemian look came long, soft and billowing hairstyles for women, she said. This style was first introduced into mainstream pop culture by Farrah Fawcett in the 1970s and can be seen all over the red carpet today.

Farrah Fawcett sports wide-legged pants and billowing hair.

Another recent popular hair trend from the decade is a horizontal bang.

MOVIE REVIEW

Rogen comedy lacks originality, comes off as creepy

"Drillbit Taylor"

Review by Brendan Praeger

"Drillbit Taylor" tries hard to earn its laughs, present a positive message and please everyone in the audience, but a creepy plot, phoned-in performances and lapses in logic keep it firmly in the realm of mediocrity.

Co-written by Seth Rogen and Kristofor Brown, the movie seems like an attempt to create a PG-13 prequel to Rogen's "Superbad." A pair of unpopular high school kids, one nerdy but sweet loser and an obnoxious kid with a weight problem attempt to find their place in high school. It's like "Superbad" before puberty and alcohol take complete control of their lives.

While "Superbad" was able to overcome a mediocre story by being riotously hilarious, "Drillbit Taylor" provides just enough laughs to keep the audience from throwing popcorn at the screen.

The plot follows three bullied freshman in their attempt to hire a low-budget bodyguard to protect them from a bully.

The bodyguard, played by Owen Wilson, also happens to be a homeless man who went AWOL from the army. He agrees to protect the kids in an attempt to rob them blind and run away to British Columbia.

My sense of humor might be a little weird, but a homeless man who robs a bunch of kids, showers naked on the beach and sneaks into a high school to set off fire alarms and have sex with a teacher doesn't come off as funny; he creeps me out.

Wilson's gives the same performance here as in almost every role he's ever played. He's a loser, but he's charismatic enough not to be reviled. They could have filmed this movie at the same time as "You, Me and Dupree;" no one on either set would have noticed the difference.

The movie doesn't fall completely flat, but each funny scene or clever line serves as a reminder of the movie's wasted potential. Writer Seth Rogen and producer Judd Apatow have achieved their recent success by creating comedies that don't follow the path of least resistance. Rather than using stock characters to fill out a narrative, they make every scene memorable and every character relatable.

With "Drillbit Taylor" they took a standard after-school special, added a shady mentor and enough dirty words to make soccer moms uncomfortable without driving them from the theater, and released it into the wild.

Apparently, it wasn't worth the effort required to make the movie better, and it certainly isn't worth your ticket money.

CELEBRITY NEWS

RICHIE SAMBORA GOING TO COURT

Following his arrest for suspicion of driving under the influence Tuesday night, Richie Sambora could also be facing child endangerment charges, Access Hollywood has learned.

As was previously reported on AccessHollywood.com, Sambora's 10-year-old daughter, Ava, and another juvenile were in the vehicle when police pulled the rocker over after spotting him allegedly "weaving" in a black Hummer.

Ava is Sambora's daughter with ex-wife, Heather Locklear. An adult woman was also in the vehicle.

The Laguna Beach police department is actively investigating the incident.

'X-FILES' CREATOR SPILLS SEQUEL DETAILS

The truth about "The X-Files" sequel — some of it, anyway — is now out there in an upcoming film.

"X-Files" creator Chris Carter, writer Frank Spotnitz and other crew members gathered Wednesday to discuss the TV series — and declassify some information about the upcoming film.

The popular Fox paranormal drama, which aired from 1993 to 2002, starred David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson as FBI agents Fox Mulder and Dana Scully

"While this is not a mythology movie, it's true to everything that's come before," Spotnitz said at the William S. Paley Television Festival. "It's true to Mulder and Scully, who they are and where they would be this point in their lives and all of the experiences that they've had."

CELINE DION, ASHLEY TISDALE & MORE JOIN 'IDOL GIVES BACK'

A host of A-list stars are joining the "Idol Gives Back" fold, announced early Thursday.

Singing sensation Celine Dion, box-office busting funnyman Robin Williams, Academy Award-winner Forest Whitaker, Yankee-for-a-day Billy Crystal, funnyman Dane Cook and "High School Musical" stars Ashley Tisdale and Vanessa Hudgens were just some of the names Fox added to "American Idol's" charity night, which is set to air April 9.

TINA FEY TELLS ABOUT NEW '30 ROCK' SHOWS

With television finally returning after a strike hiatus, one of television's best, Tina Fey of NBC's Emmy award-winning "30 Rock," is getting back to what she does best — making us laugh.

Access Hollywood caught up the writer-turned actress by phone recently, and she gave us a glimpse of "what's to come" for Liz Lemon and the rest of the wacky "30 Rock" gang.

Viewers can expect more romance hijinks for Tina's character, said Liz Lemon.

"Both of Liz's former boyfriends, Dennis the Beeper King [Dean Winters] and Floyd [Jason Sudeikis] will be back briefly." And Liz does have a little bit of a pregnancy scare. She probably hooks up once every seven years, yet when it rains, it pours," Fey told reporters.

30 students will be given $500 scholarships.

Pfannenstiel said even though the physical calling is over, alumni continue to send money or donate more than they initially agreed to through the middle of the year.

"Overall, I think it was a successful campaign," Pfannenstiel said. "Right now, we're just about where we were last year, and we're pretty confident and pretty happy with that."

Annie Dwyer, Telefund intern and senior in political science, said she is also happy with the Telefund donations thus far and said she thinks the overall campaign has gone much better than last year's.

"Getting started in October, we revisited the entire process of Telefund," she said. "A lot of changes needed to be made from the past."

Dwyer said one of these changes was picking a new theme for the campaign, and "Making the Connection" was the final choice. She said this overarching theme embodies the connection among students, alumni, faculty and staff; and the future of what's happening in the colleges.

"I think my favorite part of the actual event was just kind of getting all these students in here, helping them make that connection, dealing with the training process and really conveying to them why Telefund is important," she said.

"I think that's something a lot of students miss and don't understand. They think it's something they just have to do or for class or extra credit. Telling them and conveying to them how important Telefund is to the university and their colleges in general, that they're really going to affect the future of K-State and quality of education for students by doing something like Telefund – that was the best part."

Dwyer said each college typically had a goal for how much money it wanted to raise, and many already have surpassed their goals.

"On an overall basis," she said, "I'd say it was a lot better this year, and I think students enjoyed it more."

KC man guilty of killing 6 women in raid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – A judge convicted a man Thursday of killing six women whose bodies were dumped in an area frequented by prostitutes and drug dealers.

Terry Blair, 46, was found guilty of six counts of first-degree murder in the 2004 slayings. He had agreed to be tried before a judge instead of jury in return for prosecutors agreeing not to pursue the death penalty.

Prosecutors described Blair as calculating and determined to kill as many prostitutes as he could. Two of the women had been strangled, but the causes of death of the other women could not be determined because their bodies had decomposed so badly.

Prosecutors showed that Blair's semen was found on the body of victim Sheliah McKinzie and presented evidence they said showed Blair may have been the one who called 911 to tell police where to find the bodies of victims.

Blair has denied involvement in the killings and his defense attorneys said the evidence against him was weak and circumstantial. For example, they said the semen found on McKinzie proves Blair had sex with her, but not that he killed her.

In addition to McKinzie, 38, the victims were: Anna Ewing, 42; Patricia Wilson Butler, 45; Darci I. Williams, 25; Carmen Hunt, 40; and Claudette Juniel, 31.

Charges against Blair in two other slayings – those of Nellia Harris, 33, and Sandra Reed, 47 – were dismissed in October. Harris, unlike the other victims, was killed in 2003.

Blair also had been charged in three rapes and an assault that involved four victims who survived their attacks. Those charges also were dropped.

Blair was arrested in September 2004 when he was on parole for the 1982 murder of his pregnant ex-girlfriend, Angela Monroe, who was the mother of two of his children.

He had served 21 years in prison.

likely to abuse alcohol, according to the April 2006 issue of Alcoholism: Clinical and Experimental Research. The study showed that the combination reduced the perception of headache, weakness and dry mouth but did not improve motor coordination or visual reaction time.

"The energy drink on its own is not very risky," said Dr. Kent Kiracofe, who practices at Stonecreek Family Physicians in Manhattan. "It's just that when people mix it with alcohol, they're less likely to feel the full effects of the alcohol and more likely to do something dangerous like drinking and driving."

Dr. Priyantha Ranaweera, cardiologist at Mercy Regional Health Center, said the combination can cause people to drink for a longer period of time than they normally would. The caffeine in a can of Red Bull or Monster can offset drowsiness brought on by drinking alcohol.

"It doesn't make sense for people to mix alcohol and energy drinks," Ranaweera said. "I mean, how far are they willing to go to get drunk?"

Kiracofe said it was important to remember that people handle caffeine differently. Though he did not endorse consuming caffeine, he estimated a normal person would be fine if they drank one to four cans of soda a day.

"But it all depends on the person," he said. "Some people get jittery after one cup of coffee."

Kiracofe said people also have to consider energy drinks have very high levels of caffeine. Coke has 34 mg in a 12-ounce can. Red Bull has 80 mg of caffeine in an 8.3-ounce can. Monster has 160 mg in a 16-ounce can. A cup of regular coffee has more than 100 mg in an 8-ounce serving.

Another concern is that both energy drinks and alcohol increase dehydration.

Both doctors agreed people with irregular heartbeats should avoid energy drinks. According to the American Heart Association, the consumption of energy drinks can cause high blood pressure, which can lead to an irregular heartbeat.

There is no FDA regulation on the amount of caffeine that energy drinks can contain. Also, many of the drinks do not specify the caffeine content on the can.

"It seems like maybe they should regulate energy drinks because you can get a ridiculous quantity of caffeine," Kiracofe said. "But to me it's up to the consumer to decide. Even if they did regulate it, there would still be ways of getting around it."

THE TREND

Mike Towne has been the manager of The Library Discount Liquor long enough to remember a time when alcohol and energy drinks were not sold in close proximity to each other.

Towne, who has been working for The Library for about six years, said he has seen a steady energy-drink boost in sales and prominence.

About 31 percent of men between the ages of 18-34 and about 20 percent of women between the ages of 18-34 use energy drinks, according to MRI. Towne said that makes Manhattan a good market for the high-caffeine product.

"The prime market that you see for that product is what you see here. That's probably why here we still see energy drinks on the rise," Towne said. "If you go to other areas without a university presence, I'm not sure if the drinks are as popular."

Liquor stores in Kansas are not allowed to sell anything besides alcohol or Kansas Lottery tickets, according to state liquor laws.

However, stores like The Library can sell energy drinks in separate "party shops" as long as they have separate entrances. Towne said their "party shop" sells cups, ice, and also various types of energy drinks.

"Energy drinks have obviously found a niche with the consumer," Towne said. "And given the fact that they're perfectly legal, I don't have an issue with them."

There is even a Red Bull vending machine placed out in front of The Library. Towne said the distributor wanted to capitalize on not only the rapidly growing energy drink market but also Aggieville's bar and entertainment district.

"One of the reasons that we agreed to let them sell it here was I can't sell it inside and there's obviously a tie-in," Towne said. "A lot of the people who are down here will either just drink the energy drink or mix it."

Though Towne cannot sell Red Bull in his liquor store, he can sell products like Sparks and Bud Extra. Both are alcoholic beverages packaged with energy drinks.

"For better or worse, those are a lot of the new products that are starting to come onto the market, and we do carry those because it does have an appeal to college students," Towne said.

TRENDS | '70s exists in whole culture

Vidal Sassoon came up with geometric shape in hair – a very straight bang," Egan said. "That trend just now kind of ended here recently but was a big part of the '70s."

The last popular hair trend from the 1970s that can be seen today for women is also the hot look for men. Egan said this is a short, shaggy, untamed style, which has shorter layers at the crown of the head that blend into longer layers at the neck.

"Definitely the young man's trend of long, wavy, combed-toward-the-face hair is something we've seen in the past and mimics what we saw in the '70s," she said.

MUSIC

If 1970s pop culture could be remembered for one thing, it might be disco music. Craig Parker, associate professor of music history, said disco music accounted for about 40 percent of all songs in the Billboard's Top 100 list in the late '70s.

"Disco music was incredibly popular by the late '70s and is still being played in a lot of clubs today," he said.

Though it is no longer topping the charts, popular artists that influenced today's music were the Rolling Stones, Frank Zappa and James Brown, Parker said. The Rolling Stones became popular in the decade, Parker said, and were bringing a twist to rock 'n' roll.

Another rock musician, Frank Zappa, was experimenting with melding rock with classical music during this decade, Parker said, and has been a huge influence on all kinds of music genres. Though Zappa died in 1993, Parker said his music is still played by classical and rock musicians alike, just as much as it was back then.

A second experimental genre of music that got its start in the '70s was funk-rock. James Brown was the front man for this new music, which had its roots in the Motown era of the 1960s, Parker said. Funk-rock flourished in the '70s.

"Rap really didn't get going 'til the early 1980s," he said. "James Brown was doing really rhythmically based songs and lyrics, which influenced the music that came along with Run DMC in the '80s, and that style certainly dominates popular music."

Anti-war folk music also surfaced due to the Vietnam War, Parker said. But once the war was over, he said this music lost its appeal until the War in Iraq.

"Artists who were working on [songs then] are still working today and writing anti-war songs against Iraq," he said. "Other musicians have joined in too, writing the same types of songs – peace rather than bombs."

Stomp the Yard Show

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Above: Members in the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc., prepare to step Friday evening during the first competitive Yard Show in the K-State Student Union's Forum Hall. "A show of this magnitude has not happened in years," said Rayonna Thomas, president of K-State's NPHC. Below: A member of the Poize Hip Hop Team dances on stage at the Yard Show Friday night at Forum Hall in the Union.

Historically black greeks showcase step talents in new campus tradition

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's historically black greek organizations let their bodies be their instruments through the art of stepping for a packed audience Friday night in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

The National Pan-Hellenic Council and the Union Program Council brought the first competitive "Yard Show" to campus. A show of this magnitude has not happened in years, said Rayonna Thomas, president of K-State's NPHC and junior in apparel and textiles.

Each greek organization incorporated chanting, dance and the history of its fraternity or sorority into the performance. K-State's hip-hop dance team Poize also performed.

"I'd never seen stepping before, and what was most exciting to me was the way that each group told a story," said Alison Muckel, Sigma Kappa member and senior in business management.

The NPHC serves as the umbrella organization for the black greek letter fraternities and sororities, said Quantrell Willis, cohost of the event and Multicultural Student Organization adviser.

The Yard Show's intention was to develop into an annual event, Willis said.

"We felt there was a need to bring NPHC organizations back to campus," Willis added.

Minutes before the show, the auditorium filled up and people struggled to find seats. Some were even turned away because the hall was packed to capacity.

Starting off the Yard Show was Manhattan High School's Black Student Union step team. The team's performance was followed by the members of he sorority Delta Sigma Theta, who incorporated stepping and dancing into a mystery skit. Songs like "Inspector Gadget" and detective music were included in the routine to keep the audience engaged.

Stepping has roots in Africa

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students have seen the high-energy performances of stepping, but are unaware of the rich history and African roots of the dance form.

Stepping, a dance form created by historically black greek organizations, combines chanting, singing and dancing to tell a story and the history and platforms of fraternities or sororities.

Brandon Clark, K-State Alpha Phi Alpha adviser said stepping is a tradition that started in the mid 1900s that uses the body as an instrument. The dance form has origins from African dance.

Many sources agree that stepping derived from African culture and an African dance that incorporates slapping the arms, legs and chest, created in West Africa by slaves when slave owners refused to let them communicate by drums.

This type of dance then moved over to tap dance once it was incorporated with music and then evolved into stepping.

According to the Black Greek Network Web site, it is thought that not one black fraternity can claim to be the founders of stepping.

"It is possible that this came about during the first joint meeting of any of the black national fraternity's conventions in the early 1920s. The results of which was the Inter-Fraternity Conference of 1922 in Washington, D.C.," according to the site. "In between sessions and even during social events it is believed that stepping, in a sense, was done while each organization strutted their stuff, most

Legislature tries to tackle illegal immigration issue

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Illegal immigration has been a priority of federal government, as well as state and local governments for years, and Kansas is no exception. After months of trying, the state legislature is close to an agreement on how to deal with illegal immigration.

CARLIN

The House and the Senate passed similar, but not identical, bills Friday. The House passed its version of a bill Friday afternoon and the Senate approved its version hours later. Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said debate on the House bill was heated and was anything but quick and easy.

"It was hotly debated," Carlin said of the bill. "We did go through a lot of amendments to make the best bill."

She said many amendments were proposed during the debate, and the bill changed greatly during discussion. The final vote for the House version was 96-27.

The House bill would criminalize identity and voter fraud, and employers would be required to use a federal database, called E-Verify, that checks citizenship statuses of workers, according to a Kansas House Democratic Caucus press release.

Before the laws can go to the governor to be signed, the Senate and the House will have to pass the same bill. Carlin said that will take some work.

"We'll probably get another vote or two," she said.

The Senate's bill would outlaw human trafficking and using a false identity to get a job. In fact, the biggest point of disagreement for the legislation was how to deal with businesses that might hire illegal workers.

"It is an effort to crack down on businesses that knowingly hire illegal workers or recruit them to come work for them," Carlin said.

Carlin also said the House is wary of laws that are strict, and they hurt businesses in Kansas. She said other states have seen the effects of laws that go too far.

"Oklahoma has suffered a lot of devastation," she said. "Strict laws have caused an economic hit on their state. Immigrants are leaving the state, and they don't show up for work because they are afraid."

On an episode of "Star Trek Voyager," Capt. Janeway uses a hand-held device to check if her food was edible. On another episode, a crewmember uses a device to scan a rock formation on an alien planet. Another crewmember heals an injured patient by waving a device over the patient's forehead.

These science-fiction situations allow viewers to fantasize about the technology of the future.

"Star Trek" pushes the limits of space by "going where no man has gone before." Two K-State physics professors and an associate professor of industrial and manufacturing systems engineering are pushing the boundaries of technology by developing laser technology that might be applicable to futuristic technologies similar to those viewed on science-fiction shows like "Star Trek."

COURTESY PHOTO

The professors are attempting to build the fastest pulsing laser in history by using attosecond optical technology based on recollision and gating, said Charles L. Cocke, university distinguished professor of physics. An attosecond is .25 billionths, billionth of a second.

"The pulses are so fast that they are about equal to the time it takes an electron to get around the nucleus of an atom," Cocke said.

Recollision is a process of shooting an X-ray at an atom. The X-ray rips the electron off the atom. The electron then returns to the atom, "colliding" with it. This recollision gives off a special kind of X-ray pulse.

Because of the size of an atom and the laser used to create the recollision, thousands of recollisions occur simultaneously. The researchers use a process of gating to control the pulses emitted by the laser. Gating allows a single pulse of energy to be released through the laser lens. "If you have a lot of sheep and you only want one to get through, you would open the gate and only allow one sheep to go through and then close it," Cocke said. "We start with pulses about 25 times longer than [.25 attoseconds]. We use them to generate [recollision] pulses."

Cocke said the shortest pulse laser today is 125 attoseconds. The team's goal is to build a laser that pulses at 25 attoseconds. Right now, the laser pulses between 25 femtoseconds to a few hundred attoseconds. Because of the minute amounts of radiation generated by the laser, Cocke

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1889: EIFFEL TOWER OPENS

On March 31, 1889, the Eiffel Tower was dedicated in Paris in a ceremony presided over by Gustave Eiffel, the tower's designer, and attended by French Prime Minister Pierre Tirard, a handful of other dignitaries and 200 construction workers.

In 1889, to honor of the centenary of the French Revolution, the French government planned an international exposition and announced a design competition for a monument to be built on the Champ-de-Mars in central Paris. Out of more than 100 designs submitted, the Centennial Committee chose Eiffel's plan of an open-lattice wrought-iron tower that would reach almost 1,000 feet above Paris.

WEDNESDAY 2005: POPE JOHN PAUL II DIES

On this day in 2005, John Paul II, history's most well-traveled pope and the first non-Italian to hold the position since the 16th century, died at his home in the Vatican. Six days later, two million people packed Vatican City for his funeral, said to be the biggest funeral in history.

TUESDAY 1700: APRIL FOOLS' TRADITION BEGINS

On this day in 1700, English pranksters began popularizing the annual tradition of April Fools' Day by playing practical jokes on each other.

Some historians speculate that April Fools' Day dates back to 1582, when France switched from the Julian calendar to the Gregorian calendar. People who were slow to get the news or failed to recognize that the start of the new year had moved to January 1 and continued to celebrate it during the last week of March through April 1 became the butt of jokes and hoaxes.

THURSDAY 1860: PONY EXPRESS DEBUTS

On this day in 1860, the first Pony Express mail, traveling by horse and rider relay teams, simultaneously left St. Joseph, Miss., and Sacramento, Calif. Ten days later, on April 13, the westbound rider and mail packet completed the approximately 1,800-mile journey and arrived in Sacramento, beating the eastbound packet's arrival in St. Joseph by two days and setting a new standard for speedy mail delivery.

FRIDAY 1968: DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. ASSASSINATED

Just after 6 p.m. on April 4, 1968, Martin Luther King Jr. was fatally shot while standing on the balcony outside his second-story room at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tennessee. The civil rights leader was in Memphis to support a sanitation workers' strike and was on his way to dinner when a bullet struck him in the jaw and severed his spinal cord. King was pronounced dead after his arrival at a Memphis hospital. He was 39 years old.

High wheat prices caused by drought, increase in demand

Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wheat prices across the country are some of the highest farmers have ever seen. This means more money for those growing the crop, but it also means higher prices for production agencies and consumers of wheat products.

Mike Woolverton, K-State grain market economist, said wheat prices have skyrocketed because of a shortage of healthy yields worldwide from drought and increased demand. He said because of growth in the global economy, people are buying more food and increasing demand, resulting in higher prices.

"In the past, the value of wheat was about seven cents in a loaf of bread," said Woolverton, visiting professor of agricultural economics. "Right now, it's 17 cents in a one-pound loaf of bread. We can get about 70 one-pound loaves out of a bushel of wheat."

As of Thursday, he said the price of wheat per bushel was $10.29 in Kansas City.

"I don't recall wheat prices being this high in a long time," said Jim Shroyer, K-State Research and Extension crop production specialist. "Usually farmers get really tickled when it gets to $5 or $6, so that's just unbelievable it's at $10."

Wheat prices are even higher up north. Shroyer said hard red spring wheat was $20 a bushel in Minneapolis, which had crop specialists worried Kansas farmers would try to grow spring wheat and attempt to sell it in northern states. This, he said, most likely would have resulted in a unsellable crop.

Shroyer said spring wheat is considered the Cadillac of wheats because of its high protein count, where as hard red winter wheat – what Kansas wheat farmers typically grow – is just the Chevrolet. But winter wheat requires a cold period of three to six weeks before it can green and eventually produce a solid grain, making Midwest weather ideal for growing conditions. Spring wheat, however, does not need that cool period. It is planted in the spring and cut in late summer.

"If you did that here, the spring wheat would not produce all that much, because our summers get hotter than up north," Shroyer said.

Yet, because of a lack of precipitation across the Great Plains this season, winter wheat has not been doing so well in parts of the region, he said.

TIME IS EVERYTHING

Woolverton said the condition of the crops varies greatly from farm to farm. He said the wheat in the Riley County area has been promising, but across western and southwest Kansas, as well as the panhandles of Oklahoma and Texas, a large amount of wheat has been coming up within the last month or so, which he said is not a good sign.

"If you planted last fall and it isn't coming up until now, you know something's wrong, and that's lack of water like in western and southwest Kansas," he said. "Right now, we're watching the wheat-growing conditions in western Kansas, and it's really suffering from dry weather. The rest of the state looks good, but we're keeping a close eye on crop conditions."

Woolverton said it is still too early to predict what the final outcome of the crops will be, but farmers will be receive more money for it than they ever have.

But because of these higher prices, Shroyer said consumers and production companies are having to spend more on production and product costs, and it is not just wheat products like breads and cereals that are more expensive for consumers. It is also dairy and meat products and almost anything animal-based.

"Any animal that eats the grain," he said, "those costs are going to be high too."

COOP-ERATION

Darin Marti, general manager for the Farmers Cooperative Association Manhattan grain elevator, said the higher costs also have affected crops.

"The biggest thing I'd say it's doing to us as business is that it's increased our handling costs and costs of operations," he said. "When the grain prices are high like that, it takes more money to carry in inventory, so we've got a lot

HARD RED WINTER WHEAT

Hard Red Winter is an important bread wheat which accounts for almost forty percent of the U.S. wheat crop and wheat exports. This fall-seeded wheat is produced in the Great Plains, which extend from the Mississippi River west to the Rocky Mountains and from the Dakotas and Montana south to Texas. Significant quantities are also produced in California. HRW has a moderately high protein content, usually averaging 11-12 percent, and good milling and baking characteristics.

HARD RED SPRING WHEAT

Hard Red Spring (HRS), another important bread wheat, maintains the highest protein content, usually 13-14 percent, in addition to good milling and baking characteristics. This spring-seeded wheat is primarily grown in the north central United States - North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota and Montana. HRS comprises just over 20 percent of U.S. wheat exports. Subclasses based upon the dark, hard and vitreous kernel content (DHV), include dark northern spring, northern spring and red spring.

Car windows broken, unsecured moped stolen

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The back window of a 2002 Chevrolet Impala was broken in an attempt to steal a stereo Thursday, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

The damage amounted to $500, and the attempted burglary occurred at 821 Mission Ave., according to the report.

The back window of a 2000 Ford Explorer also was broken Thursday. The incident occurred at 9306 Blue Ridge Road and caused $600 in damage to the car.

A moped was stolen from the parking lot at 913 Bluemont Ave. on Thursday, according to the police report.

The Schwinn Collegiate moped was valued at $1,800. It had not been secured at the time it was stolen.

No arrests have been made in connection with these incidents.

4-letter #@$%

'No cussing club' should inspire political involvement

Very rarely are people upset by an occasional "F-bomb" or other varied forms of four-letter-words, but don't include 14-year-old McKay Hatch in that category. Hatch, a South Pasadena, Calif., teenager has taken cleaning-up people's mouths to a whole new level.

Hatch's mantra of – "if you wanna hang with us, don't cuss" – was formed during his grassroots campaign at his junior high school where he and eventually 50 other students formed a "No Cussing Club."

In a story by KNBC-TV in Los Angeles, Hatch put his plan into action after "a lot of kids at my school, and some of my friends, would cuss and use dirty language all the time," he said. "They did it so much they didn't even realize they were doing it." We also can't forget to mention Hatch's rap video with a chorus promoting the same slogan, available for viewing on YouTube.com.

Now, with his Web site NoCussing.com, Hatch boasts No Cussing Club members in 50 states and 10,000 members worldwide. His initiative has led to appearances on all major news networks, an interview on the March 14 episode of "Dr. Phil" and the implementation of Hatch's main goal: a city-wide "Cuss-Free Week" in South Pasadena per an official order from the mayor.

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

The work Hatch has done is incredible for a 14 year old. While his family is a driving force and provides much support, NoCussing.com not only shares Hatch's message that using bad language can be extremely harmful, but enables the purchase of the club's T-shirts, wristbands and a book written by Hatch's parents, "Raising a G-Rated Family in an X-Rated World."

AUBREE CASPER

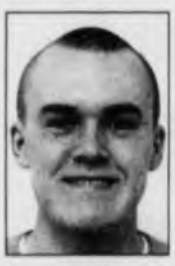
However, the group seems to promote a "holier than thou" mentality, wording stories and statements making the use of "bad words" seem as repulsive and unacceptable as rape or murder. Maybe I'm just slightly more offended; I was threatened to have my mouth washed out with soap more times than I can count, and there is no way Hatch would ever let me hang with him anyway.

In fact, the KNBC story quotes Hatch as saying, "If my friends could say no to cussing, how much easier will it be for them to say no to drugs, violence and pornography?" This is hardly a valid match, especially for 14-year-old children who are just dawning on the next few years' mission to rebel against and do any small thing to displease parents.

Right now, Hatch is a revolutionary in the eyes of public opinion and media, but his manual of good words that can be used to replace bad ones will come back to haunt him; an odd similarity in terms and corniness of the popular Orbit commercial which implements FCC appropriate alternatives like "lint-licker," "cootie queen," "what the French toast," "Hoboken" and "Stinky McStinkface."

God forbid that boy ever uses a curse word. The media will spin that story and Hatch's "street cred" will be lost forever. Poor Hatch has – at age 14 – even been publicly called a Nazi, by people who say his plan to keep people from cussing violates First Amendment rights and fear that conservative Hatch will get older and use his fame to promote even more "fascist" ideas worldwide.

While I do not agree with that extreme of a view – though Hatch comes across as a puppet for his old-fashioned parents – Americans can learn a valuable lesson from all of this. A lesson that isn't new to our nation and is particularly appropriate during election season: if you don't agree with something, don't sit around and complain – do something to fix it.



The U.S. Census Bureau said that 64 percent of Americans voted in the 2004 elections. Most people would be willing to bet that more than 64 percent of our nation complains about our government, yet they refuse to spend 20 minutes at the polls on Election Day.

Maybe Hatch won't help you stop cussing, but at least he might inspire you to actually vote and act on an issue you feel needs change. That is something Hatch has definitely gotten right.

U.S. lacks authenticity in politics, education

Before Mike Huckabee, R-Ark., dropped out of the presidential campaign, he called himself an "authentic conservative." And, the Chipotle Mexican Grill restaurant, by serving meat free of antibiotics, chose the label "Food with Integrity." Now, when people shop, they typically gravitate toward the most authentic food with the label "USDA organic."

BLAKE OSBORN

This fixation of the authenticity in politics and in food is a result of the overarching homogeneity in U.S. culture, according to a recent article in Time magazine. Legendary business consultants James Gilmore and Joseph Pine II, who together wrote "Authenticity," said in the article that America has "toxic levels of inauthenticity." As a result, they claim it is essential for businesses, if they want to thrive, to "start selling experiences" instead of products.

No longer are buyers concerned with only price and quality. Instead, they respond more to the product or the person as an experience. Companies must be "transparent," meaning they are what they claim to be, or they can openly fake their authenticity by offering cheap substitutes, thus the phrase "synthetic authenticity."

Going against centuries of standard economic theory, today's customers look beyond the price and quality of a product, according to a new school of behavioral economists in the last 20 years.

This is one of 10 ideas that Time magazine predicts will take precedence in 2008. Another notable idea listed in Time was the end of customer service with the "self-serving store," which has "revolutionized retail" with copies like ATMs and pump-your-own gas.

This replacement of the person with the machine was mentioned in social critic George Ritzer's 1996 book "The McDonaldization of Society." He used McDonald's as the archetypal example of how calculated and processed our lives have become with this homogeneity.

"Replacement of human by nonhuman technology is often oriented towards greater control," Postman wrote. Thus, in response to this predictable "pre-packaged, premeasured, automatically controlled" environment, it makes sense that Americans are ready for a more authentic experience in life.

Gilmore and Pine point out how the virtualization of life, with friends meeting on Facebook.com and the increasing popularity of blogs, increases the desire for more authentic experiences with others beyond e-mail or instant messaging. Even teachers in the classrooms are competing with technology with the online classes that are available for students.

According to a recent article from The New York Times, more than two-thirds of all higher-education institutions have online opportunities in some form. While some are enthusiastic about the economic benefits of online classes, others are not so excited.

Stephen Ruth, professor of public policy and technology management at George Mason University, said in the article that the atmosphere of the classroom simply cannot be replaced.

Online classes are "not in par, in my opinion, with traditional classes at top-tier universities," Ruth said. "[T]he general ambience of the class provides a better experience."

I would have to agree with Ruth in regards to education. I would prefer the interactive atmosphere of a classroom to the computer screen. And, I also would agree that "self-serving" stores have their limits. Technology has its limits.

While we must take advantage of the advancements of the age, we also must not forget the value of customer service and a teacher who can bring a subject to life. We must not get stuck in what Ritzer termed the "irrationality of rationality," where control takes precedence over quality and can be dehumanizing for the customer or student.

We must not forget the true meaning of authenticity, which is more than a blank computer screen or an ATM.

HIT OR MISS

HIT | SPRING WEATHER IS NEAR

Though the weather has been a bit flaky this weekend, there definitely is an overall improvement. We can see a light at the end of the winter weather misery.

MISS | AD ASTRA PER ASPERA

Yet another uncreative football slogan – Ad Astra Per Aspera – has been chosen. That and last year's "Power of One" slogan just goes to show how unimaginative the K-State football team can be.

HIT | GIRL SCOUT COOKIES

Kudos to the Girl Scouts of America for hitting up a college town to sell cookies. Target is a great location for catching starving students and luring them in with some shortbread, thin mints and peanut butter patty cookies.

MISS | NO GOO GOO DOLLS

The Gridiron Bash, which was supposed to take place during Spring Game April 18 and 19 and feature the popular band the Goo Goo Dolls, has been canceled.

HIT | NO GOO GOO DOLLS

It's unfortunate the Gridiron Bash was canceled, but at the same time, it's keeping Manhattanites from having to listen to the heinous sounds of the Goo Goo Dolls.

MISS | ALL 4 NO. 1 SEEDS ADVANCE

For the first time ever, all four No. 1 seeds will play in the Final Four of the men's basketball tournament. Part of the charm of the NCAA tournament is the underdogs stealing the show.

University president Duane Acker waves to the crowd at Sen. Robert Dole's recent Landon Lecture as he shrinks behind the podium.

April Fools' blooper stories not 'short' on humor

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It has been a Collegian tradition to play a joke on readers, and on April 1, 1985, this was no exception. The paper ran an upside down cover at the back of the issue, which looked legitimate, except the mast read, "K-Straight Cowlegian – say it right," and had a number of fake stories. The following is one such story written by "Reporter at Large, Fernando Lamas III."

TAINTED DRINK SHRINKS ACKER OUT OF SIGHT

Militant farmers attempting to drug Sen. Robert Dole with a newly developed strain of short wheat before he presented a Landon Lecture last Monday accidentally slipped the drug into President Duane Acker's coffee, causing him to diminish in size.

Acker suffered no effects from the drug for at least an hour after drinking the contaminated coffee. However, while introducing Dole during the lecture, he began to shrink in size and experienced shortness of breath.

The latest update on Acker's condition reports that the president is at 3 feet 2 inches tall and still shrinking.

A group calling themselves Kansas Farmers Against Dole claimed responsibility for the incident in a brief telephone call to University Minister of propaganda, Charles Heinsight, immediately following the incident. The caller reportedly told Heinsight the drug was intended for Dole.

"We meant for Dole to get the bad coffee," the caller said. "There was no reason to cut President Acker down to size – he's short enough already."

The caller told Heinsight the attempted attack against Dole was meant to show farmers' discontent with Dole's stand on the farm issue. The drug was intended to make Dole fit easily into the hip pocket of any Kansas farmers' interest group.

Heinsight said the university was currently negotiating to get an antidote from the farmers. While negotiations are under way, special Ken-and-Barbie doll-size clothes have been purchased for Acker.

Iraqi poet answers questions on works, war

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

She has been exposed to wars in her homeland since she was 15 and lived in fear of even walking down the street and being hit by a bomb. Inspired by these trials, this poet has always written what was in her heart.

Mikhail

"When I write, I don't think why," said poet Dunya Mikhail. "I just write."

The award-winning Iraqi poet came to K-State on behalf of the Department of English and shared some of her readings in two sessions Friday. One session consisted of her reading and sharing her poetry, while the other gave students, faculty and staff the opportunity to ask Mikhail any questions.

She told the group about her background and how she began writing in elementary school, but focused on writing poetry in high school.

"That's when I thought of myself as a poet," she said. "That's when I knew it was an essential part of my life."

Her care-free mentality and controversial poetry resulted in her leaving Iraq for fear of imprisonment. She left for Jordan in 1995 and then settled in the U.S. in 1996. During her first two years in the U.S., Mikhail said she was unable to write because she was trying to become settled and find her way around in a new country.

"It's always hard for anybody to go to a new place," she said. "But when I returned to writing, I noticed I could find poetry as a place, not a space - that's when I realized that I'm OK – I'm at home."

Melissa Glaser, graduate student in English, asked Mikhail different questions in regards to Iraqi people, culture and war. She said she was trying to gain a better understanding of what the poet had gone through.

"I feel like if people don't understand then how are things going to change?" she said.

Glaser was one of the few students who attended the interactive session with Mikhail. The room was filled with creative writers who had been extended the chance to interact with Mikhail. She asked the group several different questions in regards to their writing styles and motives, engaging the attendance. The group also was able to ask Mikhail more personal questions regarding her poetry, journey, ambitions and struggles as an Iraqi poet.

There were several questions asked about future work from the author, and Mikhail said to expect two new works from her. One work will be a new collection of poetry that focuses on love, and the other will be a book about her life and her experiences.

In closing, Mikhail encouraged her audience to keep writing and explained what it is about writing that keeps her going.

"When I write, it's that sense of feeling at home that I need," she said. "I can be at home wherever I am, just as long as I am writing."

K-State wins series against Oklahoma State for 1st time in 8 years

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State hadn't beat No. 22-ranked Oklahoma State in a series since 2000, but that ended this past weekend as the Wildcats took two of three games from the Cowboys.

The Wildcats (13-12, 2-4 Big 12 Conference) have won six of their last seven after going on a five-game losing streak.

The Cowboys (18-8, 4-5 Big 12) came in ranked as one of the best offenses in the Big 12 Conference and the Wildcats held them to 12 runs over three games. Oklahoma State had scored 34 runs in one game earlier this season.

FRIDAY: K-STATE 4, OSU 3

Kansas State's starting pitcher, senior Brad Hutt, shut down Oklahoma State's offense, giving up three runs over eight innings of work and helping K-State to a 4-3 victory.

The only time it seemed Hutt's performance might go south was in the eighth inning. The Cowboys recorded two quick outs before Hutt walked Oklahoma State senior Matt Hague. Then senior Rebel Ridling stepped up to the plate and hit the first pitch delivered over the left field fence. That home run tied the game at three.

"That's what we were concerned about," coach Brad Hill said about the atmosphere after the Ridling homerun. "We've been there before, unfortunately, and again I just think our kids are starting to make a little progress going in the right direction."

The tie looked as if it were going to go into the ninth, but the Wildcats found a way to get two base runners on with two outs. The first was when junior Nate Tenbrink earned a walk and promptly stole second base. The next batter, junior Rob Vaughn, singled to move Tenbrink to third.

K-State's senior Brett Scott walked up to plate and hit a hard grounder through the right side of the infield, knocking in the winning run.

"[We] got some big at bats right there," Hill said. "When it counted for the game, we got on top and hit two balls through the hole."

Scott ended the day one-for-two and two RBI. His first RBI came in the fourth inning when he sacrifice-bunted freshman Jason King in and it put the Wildcats up 3-1.

Oklahoma State started the scoring off in the second when junior Tyrone Hambly hit a double to knock in junior Donnie Webb from third, and it was the last time the Cowboys threatened to put runs on the board until the eighth.

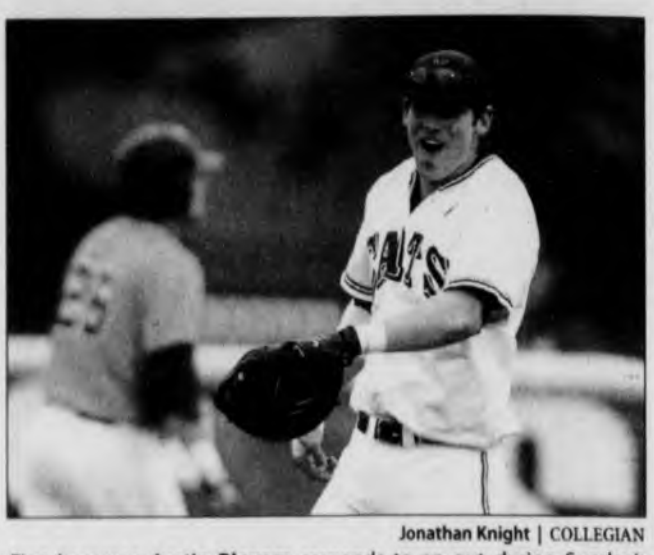
Senior Daniel Edwards came in to pitch the ninth for the Wildcats and after an opening walk and a sacrifice bunt, he struck out two straight batters to end the game.

The win moved Hutt to 3-2 and 1-0 in Big 12 Conference play.

SATURDAY: OSU 9, K-STATE 4

K-State had solid starting pitching again Saturday, but once the relief pitching took over Oklahoma State's bats started warming up and led the Cowboys to a 9-4 win.

The Wildcats' starting pitcher Justin Murray went six innings only giving up two runs on six hits. The junior only struck out four, but Hill said he seemed in full control of the game.



"Justin Murray was making great pitches and doing a good job," he said.

Wildcat relievers took over in the seventh and held the Cowboy offense at bay, but in the eighth, Oklahoma State's bats took off. Daniel Edwards came in after K-State's junior reliever Trevor Hurley left the bases loaded off of three walks, but some of the calls had fans booing from the stands

"I thought Trevor Hurley had great stuff," Hill said. "I'll just leave it at that."

Cats place 3rd in weekend competition

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State was unable to pull out a victory over Oklahoma State and Baylor, but topped No. 1-seeded Texas A&M during the Central Championships Saturday and Sunday.

Saturday's competition opened with a ceremony that featured former football coach Bill Snyder and his wife, Sharon. Snyder said he agreed to ride in the opening ceremony following a bet he made with the team at the groundbreaking ceremony for the new equicenter.

"All the girls were there and they were competing against South Carolina the next day," Snyder said. "They asked, 'If we win, will you ride a horse for us?' and I said 'yes.' So here I am."

Whitney Snyder, Bill and Sharon's daughter and a senior English rider, was unable to capture any MVP awards Saturday but won in equitation over fences Sunday vs. Texas A&M's Katie Henion. It was her fourth MVP award of the season.

"Whitney has been a constant for us all season long," said English coach Ashley Foster. "We can always count on her senior leadership and experience to give us good rides every time. She has just been so steady and spectacular."

One of the scariest moments in English competition Saturday came after senior Leslie Yates' horse hesitated at a jump. The horse ran into the jump and stopped and Yates fell off the horse. Yates received a no score for her efforts.

Senior Alyssa Freeman also showed well for the Wildcats on Saturday, picking up an MVP in western horsemanship. She finished with 77 points, two points ahead of the next closest competitor. However, her Sunday showing came up two points short versus Texas A&M's Caroline Gunn.

"I was really happy with the beginning of it," Freeman said of her second ride. "I kept it really connected. We don't do running patterns very often. She's a harder horse to change leads on, so I was pretty happy with my lead changes today. It was a pretty

Changes indicate potential for Kansas City franchise

JUSTIN NUTTER

Rather than partying or relaxing on the beach this spring break, I was in Surprise, Ariz., watching the Kansas City Royals during their spring training. During my trip, I noticed the team that I have followed so closely for many years has changed.

Headlined by the departures of a long-time team captain and a former manager, and the arrivals of a hard-hitting outfielder and a new manager, the Royals seem poised to improve on what was a promising 2007 campaign. Let's take a look at the differences that Royals fans can expect to see this season.

DEPARTURES

The absence of designated hitter Mike Sweeney will be the most noticeable difference this season. After being plagued by injuries for the better part of the last five seasons, Sweeney, the former captain and 13-year Royals veteran, was signed to a minor league deal with the Oakland Athletics during the off-season.

Other notable players who won't return include outfielder Emil Brown, who led the Royals in runs batted in for the last three seasons; and relief pitcher David Riske, who posted a 2.45 earned run average in 65 appearances last year. Brown will join Sweeney in Oakland, and the Milwaukee Brewers signed Riske. Former manager Buddy Bell, who took over during the 2005 campaign, also left the team after the conclusion of last season. He is now in the Chicago White Sox organization.

ARRIVALS

The Royals acquired a much-needed power hitter during the off-season with the signing of outfielder José Guillen. Unfortunately, he currently has a 15-game suspension looming because of use of performance-enhancing drugs while with the Seattle Mariners last season. However, depending on the outcome of discussions between the Players Association and the MLB, the suspension could be reduced or even removed.

The Royals also bolstered their pitching staff with the acquisitions of Brett Tomko, who earned a spot in the rotation after a strong performance this spring, and relievers Ron Mahay and Yasuhiko Yabuta. Mahay, entering his 14th Major League season, will make Kansas City the seventh team of his career. This will be the first Major League action for Yabuta, who has spent the last 12 seasons pitching in his home country of Japan.

Also joining the Royals from Japan is new manager Trey Hillman, who has spent the last five seasons as the manager of the Hokkaido Nippon Ham Fighters. During that stretch, Hillman led the Ham Fighters to three postseason appearances, including two trips to the Japan World Series, which they won in 2006.

While this is his first season as a major league skipper, Hillman has had success at the minor league level, compiling a .529 winning percentage in 12 years in the New York Yankees system. That span includes eight winning season and four postseason appearances. Hillman has a history of turning unsuccessful teams into contenders, so he could be just what the Royals have been looking for.

With a big bat added to the lineup and a newly refurbished pitching staff, the Royals appear to be headed in the right direction and out of the American League cellar. I'm not saying that anyone should consider them to be contenders, but that could be a definite possibility in the next few years. They have been slowly progressing over the last few seasons, and they might finally have the tools they need to get to the next level.

So, to all those Royals fans: It's been a long time coming, but this may finally be the light at the end of the tunnel.

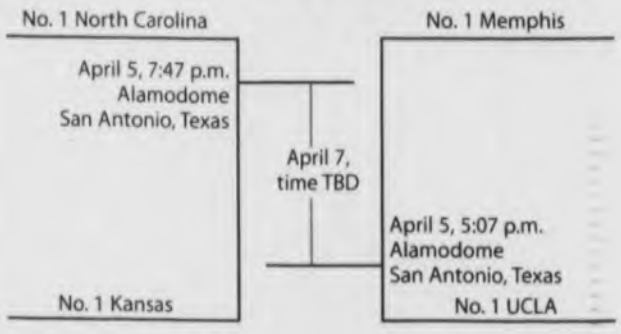
Gridiron Bash canceled, Goo Goo Dolls not coming

A possible NCAA violation put an abrupt end to the Gridiron Bash that was to precede various spring games across the country.

MSL Sports and Entertainment, the company putting on the festivities, said they canceled it because of NCAA questions about whether player participation violated their rules, according to an article on SportingNews.com, the online version of the magazine with the same name.



The bash was supposed to bring the Goo Goo Dolls to K-State. Those who had already purchased tickets to the event should receive a refund. The Collegian was unable to contact the K-State ticket office to verify this. According to an article in the Alabama Press-Register, the entertainment company might try to reschedule the events for fall or spring 2009.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Wildcats top OSU, fall to OU at home

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Watching the K-State women's tennis team last weekend was an interesting study in contrasts.

The Wildcats welcomed Oklahoma State to the Washburn Tennis Facility Friday, and rallied from two down to defeat the Cowgirls, 4-3. Meanwhile, against the Oklahoma Sooners on Saturday, K-State's fortunes were drastically different as the Wildcats lost 7-0.

Coach Steve Bietau said he thought the team let the Sooners dictate to them how to play their game.

"From a certain point in the doubles, yes," he said. "We were six all on the first court and were close to winning or had won on [the 2nd court], and we were up 7-4 on the third court and from that point on there just wasn't much here."

When the Wildcats and Cowgirls faced off, the game was different. K-State won the doubles point for the first time since Feb. 16 against Sam Houston State. It was the Wildcats first win over the Cowgirls since 2003.

Junior Katerina Kudlackova and senior Olga Klimova clinched a win in the No. 1 doubles spot, topping Yawna Allen and Iryna Tkachenko, 8-5. Senior Viviana Yrureta and sophomore Natasha Vieira clinched the doubles point with an 8-6 win over Jessica Collins and Marina Tkachenko. Freshmen Antea Huljev and Vanessa Cottin fell 9-7 in the No. 2 doubles spot.

The near-equality between the teams continued into singles play, where each team captured three matches. After losses by Cottin, Kudlackova, and Vieira, and a win by freshman Pauline Guemas, who was a late substitution for Klimova; the match came down to the play of Yrureta and Huljev. Yrureta was able to fight her way through it. Tkachenko had a 6-3, 2-6, 6-2 victory. At this point, the Wildcats and Cowgirls were tied, and a victory for K-State depended on Huljev. The freshman from Velenje, Slovenia, delivered with a 5-7, 6-4, 6-4 win over Allen.

Bietau said he was particularly impressed with Huljev's maturity in the win.

"Antea stepped up real big in the third set," he said. "She's a freshman, and she's had some issues about managing her emotions during the match and being able to stay focused and play the right game. This is the biggest test she's had to date, and I thought she did a really good job in that third set.

"It wasn't the greatest tennis, but it was the way she managed herself and maintained her composure that was the difference."

Little of the match against the Sooners resembled the Wildcats efforts' on Friday. In the doubles portion of the match, the Wildcats actually captured the first win. Cottin and Huljev beat Christi Baxley and Elena Antakova, 8-4. Klimova and Kudlackova followed that up with an 8-6 loss. The Sooners took the doubles point when Yrureta and Vieira lost to Tara Eckel and Maria Kalashnikova, 9-8 (7-4). Bietau had some praise for Cottin and Huljev's win.

"They've been making some progress in their doubles and continued to do that today," he said.

During singles play, the only Wildcat to notch a set win was Guemas. The freshman fell to Eckel, 7-5, 4-6, 11-9. All other Wildcats were defeated in straight sets. Bietau was not pleased with the team's attitude.

"It'd be difficult to say we had the right attitude, given the results here," he said.

The Wildcats (6-8, 2-3) will have a brief before returning to action Friday against Texas Tech. The match begins at 1 p.m. at Washburn Tennis Facility.

Women's golf team has best finish of spring in Arizona

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team placed in a tie for 13th at the Mountain View Intercollegiate in Tucson, Ariz., this past weekend, marking its best finish at a tournament this spring.

Senior Kali Quick paved the way for the Cats, shooting an eight-over par, placing her in a tie for 20th place overall. Quick shot an even par final round 72 to help land her the fifth top-20 finish of the season and it also marked her lowest-round score of the spring.

"Kali had a nice round [Sunday]," said coach Kristi Knight. "She played super coming down the stretch on the last six or seven holes. It was really tough getting the ball close to the hole [Sunday], so I'm really pleased with what she was able to accomplish."

Also playing well for the Wildcats was freshman Elise Houtz, who carded a career-best three-over par 75 in the final-round Sunday to move her into a tie for 43rd. The 43rd-place finish was the best she has had in the three spring tournaments she has played in.

"Elise really had a solid round," Knight said. "It's a lot of fun seeing a young player in the lineup having good things happening for her. It's been a lot of fun watching her this spring."

The Cats as a team finished just five strokes out of the top-10 with a 48-over par total in the two-day, 54-hole tournament, with 36 holes being played Saturday.

The Wildcats will now turn their attention to the last tournament of the regular season before the Big 12 Championship as they travel to Miami Lakes, Fla., for the Canes and Cardinal Classic at the Don Shula Golf Course on April 7-8. Knight said they are going to continue to have good and focused practices and continue to work hard.

"There are good things happening for us," she said. "We just need to capitalize on our opportunities more."

he saw from Edwards over the short stop, and the blooper drove in two runs to tie the game at four.

Edwards' time on the mound didn't improve much. He struck out the next batter, but then gave up a two-run double to junior Michael Dabbs and then a two-run home run to junior Jordy Mercer. The inning ended 8-4 in favor of OSU.

K-State only had one hit the final four innings after scoring four runs in the fifth. Oklahoma State added one more in the ninth on a single to right by junior Tyrone Hambly that drove in senior Rebel Ridling.

SUNDAY: K-STATE 4, OKLAHOMA STATE 0

Wildcat starting pitcher Lance Hoge followed the lead of the previous starting pitchers K-State had against Oklahoma State, but he was better than both of them. He pitched a complete game shutout, only giving up three hits, leading the Wildcats to a 4-0 victory.

"I don't know what you can say," Hill said. "That was an incredible performance. He hasn't thrown more than four innings all year long."

The junior Hoge had a scary moment in the sixth. A line drive off of Oklahoma State's Matt Hague's bat hit Hoge in the side, but Hoge still managed to pick up the ball and throw Hague out at first. Hoge walked off in obvious pain, but came out in the seventh and struck out the first batter.

"It hurt bad, but I was ready to go," Hoge said. "It's hurting pretty good right now."

K-State's Nate Tenbrink put the Wildcats up in the second inning with a solo home run over the right field fence. He also hit a solo shot in the eighth. It was his second straight game with a homerun.

Hill's squad added two more in the fifth off of a two-RBI double by junior Jordan Cruz. Cruz's hit drove in freshman Jason King from second after he hit a double to lead off the inning and it also drove in Yelovich from first.

The win gave Hoge his first win on the year and the Wildcats' second in the Big 12.

good ride and I got a decent score."

Western coach Casie Williamson said Freeman's win Saturday was an important victory for the team.

"She had another great ride and continued to ride great on Sunday," Williamson said. "It's good to see her have those consistent performances weekend after weekend."

However, K-State was unable to get enough points to win the competition. Saturday, they fell 7-8 to Oklahoma State. Oklahoma State's Bailey Mahoney picked up two MVPs Saturday in equitation over fences and equitation on the flat. K-State won the two Western categories, with Freeman's horsemanship MVP and junior Morgan Campbell's win in reining.

Sunday, K-State went up against Texas A&M for third place, while Oklahoma State and Baylor faced off in the championship, a matchup that would decide in the Cowboys' favor. Yates tied with Texas A&M's Lindsay Lawerence in equitation on the flat, so no MVP was awarded. In Western reining, Freeman and Campbell tied for first and helped K-State to three points which sealed the 11-5 victory over the Aggies.

The Wildcats now have a 7-7 overall record this season. K-State will finish out the postseason at the varsity equestrian national championships in Waco, Texas, April 17-19. The English squad received a No. 7 seed and will face off first against No. 10-seeded Delaware State. The winner of the matchup will go up against No. 2-seeded Texas A&M. The English team has posted a 1-2-0 record against the Aggies this season.

The Western team received a No. 5 seed and will face off against No. 12-seeded Tennessee-Martin; if they move past the first round, they will go against No. 4-seeded Texas A&M.

Energy drink ingredients, caffeine spark health concerns

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A plethora of energy drinks lines the shelves of gas station refrigerators, most of which promise "high performance," "natural energy" and "better-for-you energy." Despite claims, the boost from energy drinks isn't much more "natural" than what a person could get from a regular carbonated beverage like Mountain Dew.

"Energy drinks are not much different than a soda, but with a little bit more caffeine. They're not a healthy drink by any means," said Lona Sandon, dietician at the American Dietetics Association. "Mostly they're just loaded with caffeine to make you feel as though you're energized, but they're not really providing a health benefit."

MYSTERY INGREDIENTS

Listed along the brim of some of the popular energy drinks are their scientific-sounding ingredients like taurine, L-carnitine, ginseng and guarana with no explanation of each ingredient's purpose. The ingredient, tuarine was listed in almost every one of 12 selected energy drinks and in high concentration. Six of the 12 drinks had 1000 milligrams per serving, with two servings per can, but experts say taurine's use is still unknown.

"There's not a whole lot of science and research as to what taurine does," Sandon said. "The manufacturers of these somehow claim that it enhances energy, but the science and evidence behind it just isn't there. The real answer is we don't know what taurine does."

According to www.nichd.nih.gov, taurine is the most abundant free amino acid in breast milk. A study mentioned by the site suggests a deficiency of taurine during childhood could result in severe mental development complications. No evidence exists, however, that shows taurine has a benefit to fully grown adults.

Without knowing very much about taurine, energy-drink manufacturers include it on the side of their cans as one of the key ingredients. But if taurine, the highest concentrated ingredient, is not the primary source of energy, the sources left are caffeine and sugar.

EFFECTS OF CAFFEINE

Sandon said caffeine is not a source of energy in itself, but rather it breaks down fats that can give you energy. She said fat breakdown will give a person more energy than carbohydrate breakdown.

The problem with caffeine and sugar is that they wear off quickly and can often leave a person more tired than before the energy drink was consumed, according to a study done by the Sleep Research Centre at Loughborough University. The researchers found that energy drinks do not counteract sleepiness, and lead to slower reaction times only 50 minutes after consumption.

According to the surgeon general's Web site, caffeine can have long-term health effects, including calcium deficiency. Caffeine increases the amount of calcium excreted in urine, which means less calcium for bones.

"Dehydration is a concern, depending upon the scenario that is present, and the dose," said Mark Haub, K-State associate professor of human nutrition. "I think sometimes caffeine is misunderstood and a little bit of caffeine isn't really going to do too much. For somebody that is caffeine naïve, there may be an issue. [For an average person] a couple hundred milligrams isn't going to do that much, but you get into 400, 500, 600 milligrams and you have jitteriness and an inability to focus."

ENERGY OR INJURY?

Most people can handle two or three cups of coffee per day, which, if the coffee is strong, can contain about 300 mg of caffeine. Sandon said some energy drinks can contain that much in a single serving. While none of the randomly selected drinks contained that high of a concentration, a new drink called Cocaine has 250 mg of caffeine in one eight-ounce serving.

Cocaine's Web site goes as far as to compare its caffeine contents to similar energy drinks, bragging nearly three times the amount of caffeine than Monster or Red Bull.

The drink with the next-highest caffeine concentration is Starbucks grande coffee, which is not an energy drink.

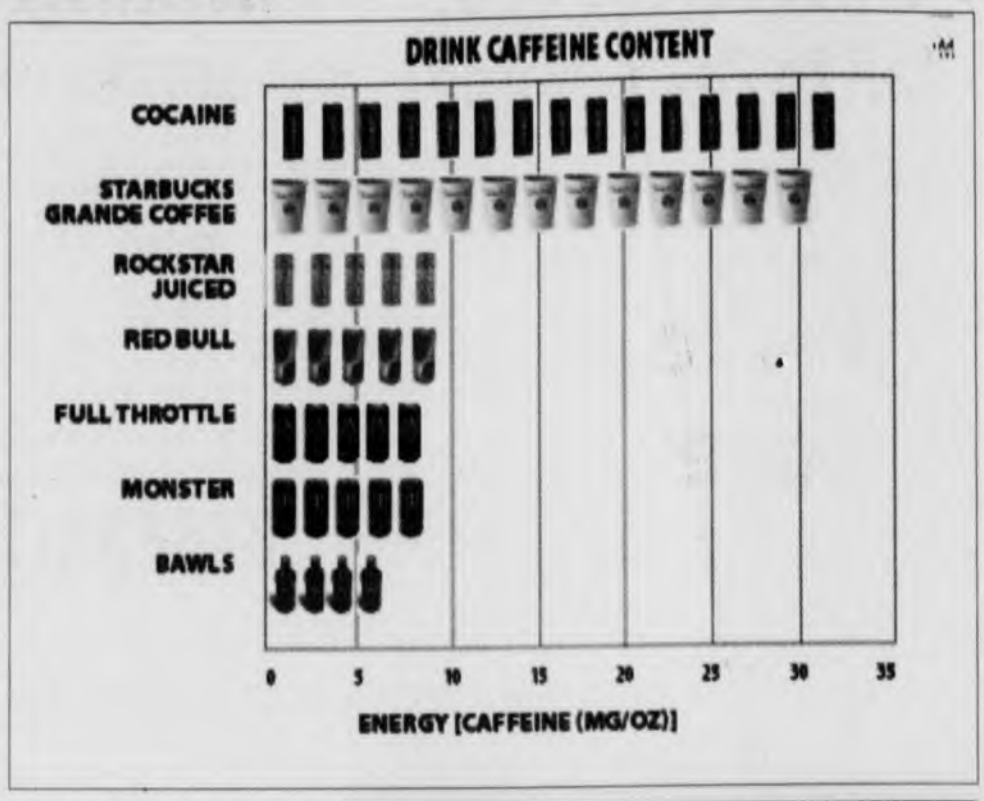
An unhealthy level of caffeine is about 500 to 600 mg per day, which can cause restlessness, anxiety, irritability, muscle tremors, sleeplessness, headaches, nausea and diarrhea. In some cases it can cause abnormal heart rhythms, which can be dangerous for people with heart disease, according to www.mayoclinic.com. The labels on the energy drink cans even suggest there are some dangers, as they warn against consumption by children, pregnant women and people sensitive to caffeine.

ANTI-DEPRESSANT FACTOR

Another ingredient less advertised, but present in nearly every energy drink, is insolitol. According to the American Journal of Psychiatry Online, insolitol has been proven to reduce levels of depression and help to stabilize people with Bipolar Disorder. However, according to a similar study in the same journal, it takes at least 6.2 grams of insolitol to get noticeable results, but the typical energy drink contains only 100 mg per serving.

Haub said insolitol is used more for taste and texture in energy drinks, rather than an active ingredient for cognitive effect, which might explain why energy drink companies don't advertise its presence in their product. However, it's still listed as an active ingredient next to caffeine and taurine.

Another ingredient sometimes highly concentrated in energy drinks is L-carnitine.



"Some studies have shown that [L-carnitine] enhances fat metabolism, others show that it does not," Haub said. It's one of those things from a comfort perspective, people can feel safe taking it, but it might not help.

DRINK SIMILARITIES

Despite all the hype and claims, Haub said some energy drinks might not have much more of an effect than caffeine mixed in water, and most energy drinks are over priced for what they do.

"Many of them are essentially the same, but the companies will tell you they're different, more extreme or healthier just to pull in consumers," he said. "We don't really have a lot to hang our hat on.

"The responsibility part is who it's marketed to," Haub said. "If people know what 250 mg of caffeine will do for them, it's their choice to take it. It's often marketed to younger consumers who may not understand the side effects of caffeine and may be purchasing it for the potential street potential, [like saying] 'I just had some Cocaine.'"

OTHER ENERGY OPTIONS

With the increasing variety and sales of energy drinks, there is obviously a market for increased levels of energy, but there are other, healthier things that can be done.

Tony Ahlgrim, dietician at Central Kansas Medical Center, suggested beverages like Gatorade and POWERade to use instead of typical highly caffeinated beverages. She said there is a risk of dehydration if a proper amount of water is not taken in conjunction with energy drinks, but Gatorade and POWERade don't contain caffeine. Instead, they use electrolytes, which deplete when a person is dehydrated from exercise.

Haub said some practices people can do to increase their level of energy is exercise more often, increase intake of dietary fibers and consume less sugar and fat based products, and outside of that, a restful night's sleep.

Despite the obvious benefits of increased energy, little is known about the effects of "mystery" ingredients in energy drinks like taurine.

Gotcha!

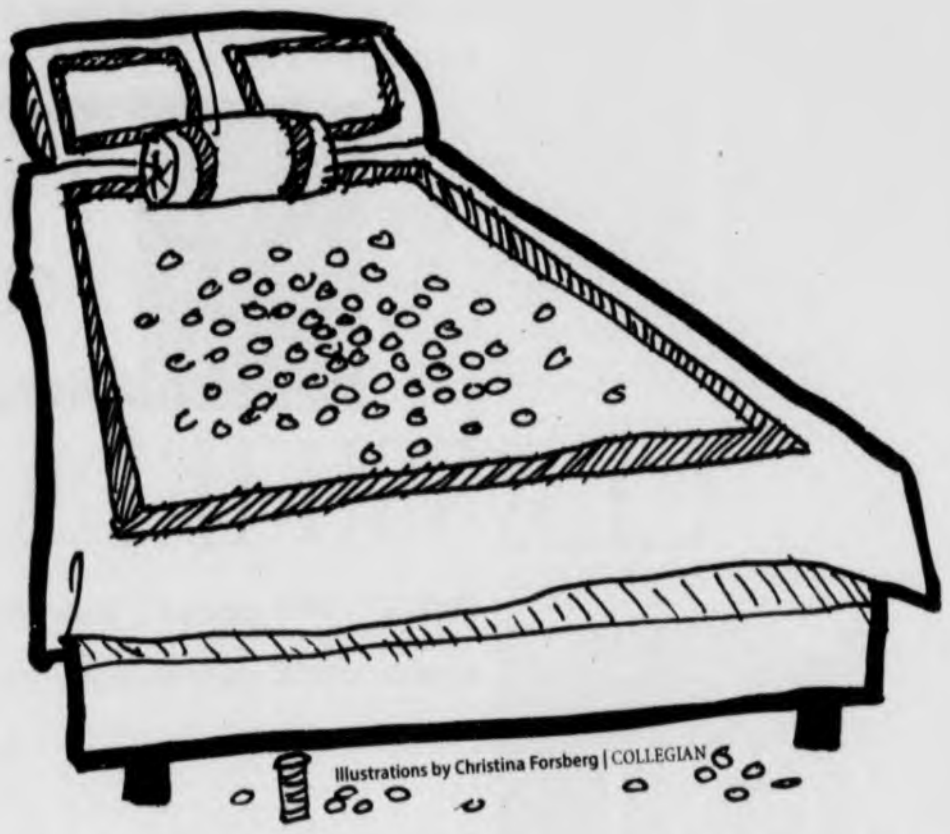
Pranks provide scares, laughs

Pranks are one of life's most wonderful treats, and the only way to improve upon a prank is to plan one that goes off without a hitch.

ERIC DAVIS

In order to pull off a successful prank, the following questions must be taken into consideration when scheming: Who can I prank? What can I do to them? Where do I start?

The first thing you need to remember is secrecy. I have had many pranks foiled because I got excited and started telling too many people about it. If you use a little more will power to make sure you don't spill the beans about what you're planning, your chances for pulling an effective prank improve.



I know it might sound like common sense, but I've been caught too many times, and my careful plans were thwarted all because I didn't keep my big mouth shut.

The second rule of pranking is to know your targets. You need to be certain that what you're planning to pull won't upset them too much. Friendships have been ruined or damaged by a prank that went too far. Generally, those pranks are fun for all involved, but the prankee might be a little upset and need some time to cool down.

This rule could also be used to help your case, if you can play on things they don't like. For example, I have a friend, let's call him "Alex," and he hates pennies with a vengeance. Alex loathes pennies so much that he throws them away to avoid having to deal with them.

I had one stroke of brilliance for a prank that took advantage of that hatred, but in a good-natured and fun way.

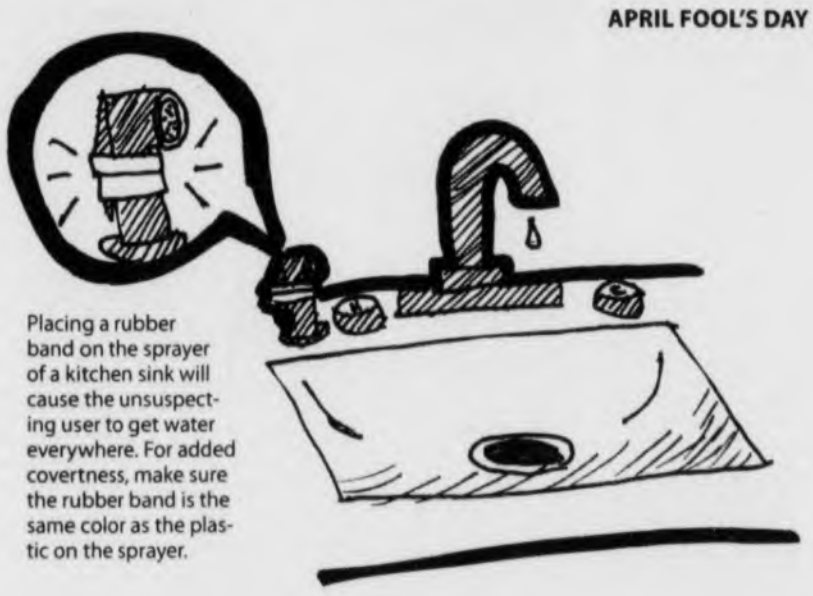
My plan was simple. Sneak into his house (with his roommate's help) while he was sleeping and cover his bed with thousands of pennies. I mean tens of dollars worth. Then set off a firecracker – just enough to wake him up – so he would wake to find himself in a sea of pennies. I am not sure I could think of a better prank with 10 years and a brain trust.

Illustrations by Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

That story was, of course, entirely fabricated, but do you see how Alex's hatred of pennies could be turned into a laughing matter? All you have to do is know your target.

The third rule of pranking is what I call the "MacGyver" factor. This is a simple principle to explain, and I have been able to pull many pranks because I came across an out of the ordinary item or the time of the year allowed for a special purchase. Like fireworks.

During Fourth of July 2007, my roommates and I planned to blow stuff up and drink beer to celebrate what the Founding Fathers fought for more than 200 years ago. However, as we were preparing to get our fireworks, one of my roommates said, "I think I'm going to take a nap. See you guys."



We decided to teach him a lesson, so we set off 250 firecrackers in his bedroom to wake him up. There is more to the story, but I feel this particular segment illustrates a prime example of where I pooled my resources to pull a prank.

Though there is more to pulling an effective prank than these three rules, they are a solid place to start. I think I have imparted some of the knowledge I've accrued over the years to help all of you out this April Fool's day.

Hopefully, you all have clear heads on your shoulders when pulling these pranks and don't do anything too foolish or harmful.

APRIL FOOL'S DAY PRANKS

Placing a rubber band on the sprayer of a kitchen sink will cause the unsuspecting user to get water everywhere. For added covertness, make sure the rubber band is the same color as the plastic on the sprayer.

A whoopee cushion under the buttocks of your target has been around for centuries. It might be old, but it gets a laugh most of the time.

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Local 'furry' explains behaviors, turn-ons of subculture

Your heart is beating faster in your chest, sweat is gathering on your brow and you are starting to second guess eating that Chinese fast-food for lunch. Yes, it is now time to explore the world, to start seeing who and what is out there. It is time to date.

MATTHIEU COMBES

Are you ready to date? You check your outfit, hair, aroma, breath and tail. You are ready to take the dating world by storm. Wait – did you just say "tail"?

Modern society is full of many diverse and interesting subcultures, and one subculture has slowly crept from the sidelines, appearing in mainstream media. Television shows like "CSI" and "Tori & Dean: Inn Love" have recently exposed the world to what a "furry" is. However, how accurate are their portrayals?

Cien Conner, senior in music education, said he thinks recent media portrayals have only shown a small part of what it means to be a furry. Furry is a broad term that describes an individual who has interest in anthropomorphic animals, Conner said.

According to www.anthrocon.org, Furry fandom is an artistic and literary genre that is practiced and enjoyed by thousands worldwide.

Think Bugs Bunny, an anthropomorphic animal who is given the attribute of human intelligence, facial expressions, anatomy, speech, bipedalism and clothing. Conner said this interest can range from a respect of their beauty, being inspired by them for art, religiously worshiping them and, yes, even a sexual attraction to them.

Furry fetish, the sexual attraction to furries, is also a broad category, Conner said. It is not to be confused with bestiality, the sexual attraction to another species. Some individuals get turned on by the idea of furries. Others enjoy doing the horizontal mambo while in "fursuit gear" – costumes that range from ears or tails to full head-to-toe costumes that can cost more than $1,000. The list also contains plushophilia, which is sex with stuffed animals.

Conner said he thinks most individuals on campus have little or no knowledge of the furry fandom.

"People just think I am a weirdo because I walk around with a tail," he said.

Those who are aware of what the furry fandom is seem to associate it with only a sexual concept. Though Conner said he thinks furries are more open, he does not feel sex is any more common in a furry relationship. This could be because of the larger percentage of homosexuals – which has historically had more progressive views on sexuality – in the furry community.

Relationships can have much variance in the culture. One example is that of a "pet," which is a caretaker or master-styled relationship. Often partners are referred to as "mates" rather than more traditional boyfriend or girlfriend.

As far back as he can remember, Conner said he has had an interest in anthropomorphic animals, but it was not until he came to K-State that he really discovered he was not alone. He said he feels furries are much like any subculture.

"It is kind of like coming out as gay, and I know some people who it was actually worse for," he said.

Though he said he has never faced a largely negative response, Conner does not miss the stares he gets when wearing his tail.

"Eventually, you just develop a thick skin," he said.

Most furries have an animal they associate with, and they tend either to pick an animal they feel fits their personality best or one they just happen to like. Conner's chosen character is a snow leopard (an animal he has always felt close to) named Satoshi, which he developed from a furry role-playing game called Furcadia. The local furries consist of about seven to eight individuals who have a close-knit community.

"I would advise people to not burn bridges before they know what lies beyond it," Conner said. "In the furry community, there really is something for everyone."

femtoseconds to a few hundred attoseconds. Because of the minute amounts of radiation generated by the laser, Cocke said, it would not be harmful to anyone.

Cocke and Zenghu Chang, professor of physics and project leader, are only concerned with the development of the technology on a basic level, not the application.

"The technology is very new, and we're still looking at possible application," Chang said.

The Department of Defense, specifically the Army, granted the professors $1.5 million a year for the next three years to develop the laser.

"What the Army wants to do with it, we don't know," Cocke said.

Shuting Lei, associate professor of industrial and manufacturing systems engineering, has found one application. Lei said he uses the laser to cut through materials and to identify how the laser cuts. The laser is powerful enough to cut through materials like diamonds, metal and silicone. It also can create three-dimensional objects, contour surfaces, or cut grooves.

"I want to observe how the laser interacts with the material. Does it start a fire on the surface or cut grooves into it. If so, why," Lei said about the second application.

Chang said the laser could be used to identify elements, according to a press release.

"Just like each person has his or her unique fingerprints, molecules can be identified by their unique features too," Chang said in the release. "As an example, different molecules absorb light differently. We can tell which one is made of gold and which one is made of silver just by looking at their colors."

Along with Chang's group, other groups of physicists at Texas A&M and the University of Ottawa, Canada are sharing the research into the laser technology, according to the press release. Cocke said the professor at Texas A&M is developing a different way to create the pulses rather than recollisions and gating. The teams meet once a year to discuss their progress and share information.

WHEAT | Prices predicted to decrease

Marti said though farmers might seem to be basking in the prices, they probably are not making much more than when prices were more stable.

"I think those that have been able to take advantage of the price really have had an advantage, at least for this year," he said, "but a lot of people sold early before the price hit the top, so it didn't help them as much. On the downside, the high grain prices have allowed for the raise of fertilizer prices. So if a farmer did not purchase at a lower price, he's probably still not gaining a whole lot with the high grain prices."

However, Woolverton said he does not predict these prices to stay high for long.

"I suspect that by the time we harvest wheat in Kansas this summer," he said, "prices will be down from this."

But wheat prices are going to remain fairly high until the global supply can be replenished, he said, which could take two years of crops.

STEP | Alphas win Show

Bryon Williams, member of Alpha Phi Alpha Inc. and senior in economics, slaps his chest during the Yard Show held in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall. Each black greek organization step group incorporated chanting, dance and the history of its fraternity or sorority into the performance.

holding up championship belts with an emcee stating the fraternities previous stepping recognitions and awards their creativity and frequent involvement in stepping gained them.

A screen fell from the ceiling to show a clip of the members of Phi Beta Sigma announcing that "they were back," which was their theme for the show. The fraternity is nationally known for stepping; however, the K-State chapter has not stepped in almost two years.

Taking home first place was Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. Second place went to Delta Sigma Theta sorority, and Sigma Phi Beta placed third.

David Hildebrandt, graduate student in architecture and Alpha step master and coordinator of the fraternities performance, said winning meant a lot to him because it was his last show before graduating from K-State in May.

"Seeing we have won other competitions, it's only natural that we would want to be best at our school," Hildebrandt said. "For us to win in front of such a broad, diverse audience, it felt really good. It was really close for us though, the other teams did really good."

The show was scheduled to fit into Koch Industries, "College for a Day Program" which focuses on recruiting multicultural students to K-State. High-school juniors and seniors throughout Kansas were present.

"We wanted to show them the social side of college life and that it can be fun," Willis said.

The main goal of the event was to raise money for the NPHC scholarship, which awards $500 to the recipient.

"The scholarship is for high school students, to help them financially and encourage them to go to college," Thomas said.

The hosts incorporated the extra-curricular activities and community service achievements of the greek organizations in between each performance to show the different opportunities greek life entails.

The acknowledgment of the fraternities and sororities involvement in the community showed that greek life is not just about partying and drinking, which is what a lot of seniors might think, said Diana Quiñones, Sigma Kappa member and senior in animal sciences and industry.

"I think it was a good way of showing high-school seniors that greek life is positive and consists of community service, platforms and involvement," Quiñones said.

likely to impress the ladies."

The Web site also said other elements of stepping formed after the return of fraternity brothers from World War II.

Various elements of military marching and line formations were implemented into fraternities with the end of the war and the advent of peace time.

Though one fraternity can not be credited, many would agree that Phi Beta Sigma and Omega Psi Phi started the dance form expression, Quantrell Willis, member of Sigma Phi Beta said.

Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana and member of Phi Beta Sigma created stepping moves sourced directly from African culture more common, Willis said.

"It is the tribal African feel of stepping that makes it powerful," he said.

Stepping has increased in popularity on college campuses and even on the silver screen. There have been several movies made that tell stories of the dance form and its participants, like "Stomp the Yard."

However, the popularity of step and its portrayal in Hollywood has failed to impress those involved in black greek life.

"I did enjoy the movie, but they made stepping a bigger deal than what it is because being in a fraternity is not just about stepping. [Stepping] is secondary," said David Hildebrandt, Alpha step master.

He also said false portrayals of stepping can lead people to get the wrong image.

"I think it's important that people understand the background – that it's not just an activity, it has a base," said Cara Kroeger, secretary of Zeta Phi Beta and junior in interior design.

Each Greek organization has a step master. "The job of the step master is to come up with the theme, and each one has their own flavor," Clark said.

Putting a show together takes hard work, time and dedication, she said.

"You have to be prepared and in good physical condition," Clark said. It usually takes about 2 to 3 weeks to put a ten minute show together, practicing almost 2 hours per practice.

Hildebrandt said his position as step master entails choreographing and teaching step routines. This year the Alpha's performed in more than six shows.

"Some of the moves I choreograph myself and sometimes I get moves from looking up other Alpha Phi Alpha moves on [YouTube.com]," Hildebrandt added.

Though many greeks said they enjoy stepping and that it promotes brotherhood or sisterhood in their organization, they want people to know that stepping is just one aspect of black greek life.

"Black Greek life is more about community service, and hopefully we can set an example on campus so people can see its not just about stepping," Hildebrandt said.

HISTORY OF STEP

MASONIC INFLUENCES (B.C. 247 - 1828)

The African influence of the marching armies of antiquity like the Warriors of Carthage, led by the military genius of Hannibal Ruler of Carthage (247-183 B.C.), the Nubian warriors of the mighty King Piankhy of Nubia (c. 720 B.C.), as well as the Zulu Legion of the famed general Chaka, the Zulu Monarch (c. 1786 - 1828 B.C.).

U.S SLAVERY (1619-1865)

Many sources agree that stepping derived from African culture and an African dances that incorporates slapping the arms, legs and chest, created in West Africa by slaves when slave owners refused to let them communicate by drums.

BLACK NATIONAL FRATERNITY CONVENTIONS (1920S)

The first joint meetings of any of the black national fraternities occurred in the early 1920s at conventions in the U.S. In between sessions, and even during social events, it is believed that stepping, in a sense, was done while each organization "strutted their stuff," most likely to impress female onlookers.

LINE FORMATION (1940S AND 50S)

Formation of members walking in lines and singing depicted the custom during the 1940s and 1950s.

SHOUT 'N FOOT STOMP 'N TRIBALISM (1960S AND 70S)

As a result of civil unrest and students' dissatisfaction with campus facilities during the 1960's, the "shout 'n foot stomp 'n tribalism" war dance dominated stepping formats during this era.

ELABORATE COSTUMES, FORMAL SHOWS (1970S TO PRESENT)

In the 1970s stepping performances began to transform to more formal performances that emphasized increased competition among the steppers who adorned elaborate costumes.

SPIKE LEE 'SCHOOL DAZE' MOVIE (1988)

School Daze is a 1988 musical-drama film, based on director Spike Lee's experiences at Atlanta's Morehouse College. It is a story about fraternity and sorority members clashing with other students at a historically black college during homecoming weekend.

'STOMP THE YARD' MOVIE (2003)

A coming-of-age drama interwoven with elements of romance, class conflict and the rich tradition of African-American college fraternities focusing on dance.

Muslim women face challenges in education, language

Most international students encounter the same problems when they study abroad: Language barriers, acclimatization, unfamiliar food, difference in educational systems, living away from relatives and friends and more.

However, Muslim women who choose to get their education in the United States often face additional challenges because of cultural differences and misunderstandings.

Jwan Ibbini came to the U.S. with her husband in 2003. She is working toward her doctoral degree through the Department of Biochemistry and plans to move back to Jordan after finishing her education this summer.

Ibbini, also the mother of a 3-year-old girl, said she enjoys her time at K-State, though she wished American students knew more about Jordan, which she said is far more modern and developed than many people think.

"I did a presentation about the Jordan last semester and talked about the culture of my country, showed national food," she said. "I was asked if we have cars."

Ibbini said she admires openness and likes when people ask her questions.

"It is a good bilateral learning experience; you learn about others, and others learn about you. The media shows you a really negative side of the Third World countries, where you can barely see anything civilized," she said. "In the United States, there is a lot of focus on the internal situation, much less focus into international news. That may be why Americans know so little about where Jordan is, where Iraq is and know little about other civilizations."

Before visiting the U.S., people from other countries have stereotypes and biases about

Peace Corps Coordinator shares involvement info, personal experience

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Peace Corps Coordinator Lajean J. Sedlacek gave a presentation Monday evening in the Manhattan Public Library for students interested in helping to improve lives overseas.

She discussed various Peace Corps opportunities for students looking to help in a variety of areas like business development, education, the environment, health and HIV/AIDS prevention and awareness. Sedlacek also shared with students information about the Peace Corps' mission and goals, application process and personal and career benefits from participation.

After showing a video featuring American Volunteers in Moldova, Malawi, Benin and other developing countries, Sedlacek shared her own experience as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Panama.

During her time overseas, Sedlacek first lived with a host family – a local couple with seven children – and then she constructed a bamboo house to live in. She helped people in several different ways throughout the two-year service. For example, she built a rice pond and planted trees to stop deforestation in the rural area. For personal development, she went hiking, traveled and participated in Panama national holiday events. Sedleck said this time abroad was a life-changing experience.

"You become a part of the local community, you learn from others about their customs, culture and then bring your knowledge and experience back to the United States," Sedleck said.

She said any U.S. citizen who is 18 or older and is willing to make a difference in the world can apply for the Peace Corps online or by filling out a manual application.

Kayla Mohnsen, a Manhattan Middle School student who attended the presentation, said, "I need to set some goals for the future, so I came here to learn more about the Peace Corps organization and the opportunities it provides."

Coal-plant proposal back in House

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius vetoed a bill that would allow the expansion of a coal-fired power plant in southwestern Kansas on March 21 because of concerns with the facility's emissions.

Sebelius

Since its veto, the bill has made its way back into the House's debate calendar, though it is not known when the bill will be discussed.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, cited several new problems with the up-and-coming edited proposal.

iSIS system has proven success in 1st week

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new student information system has tested successfully after the first week of enrollment.

Despite a few computer glitches, the system has not had any problems and has advantages over the old KATS system, said Jennifer Gehrt, director of the LASER project.

At the end of last week, 5,000 students had enrolled in fall 2008 classes, and so far there have not been any real problems with the new iSIS system.

Gehrt said she does not think there are any disadvantages to using the new student information system instead of KATS, other than people are familiar with KATS and have

ISIS TIPS FOR STUDENTS

- Pre-requisites: will be enforced in iSIS. If you have met the prerequisite but iSIS does not recognize so, contact the instructor of the class for further action.
- Summer 2008 enrollment: completed in KATS. Though summer enrollments will not exist in iSIS, you are advised to enroll in summer first to make it easier for your adviser to instruct you in the fall.
- Classes with a lecture and multiple lab sections: If you are enrolled and then want to change lab times, select the edit button which will then allow you to select a different lab.
- Personal Information: viewable in the iSIS Student Center, but must be updated on KATS through June 2.
- You are able to view the total number of seats available for a class, the number of seats still open, and the number of students waitlisted for the class, when applicable.

RCPD REPORT

Fireworks cause fire at fraternity

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fire at a K-State fraternity over the weekend was an arson, according to Riley County Police reports.

The fire at Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, 1015 Sunset Ave., was started when an unknown person set off fireworks inside the residence Friday night, RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said. The fireworks set fire to a couch in the fraternity's basement, causing damage to the couch, walls and floors of the residence, Moldrup said.

The total estimated loss for the couch was $850, and $650 was estimated as the total amount of damage to the walls and floors, according to RCPD reports.

2 injured, 2 arrested after Aggieville fight

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fight in Aggieville early Saturday morning resulted in two men being injured and two men being arrested, according to Riley County Police reports.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said Ragelio Espinoza, 23, and Jessie Page, 21, both of Fort Riley, were beaten unconscious during an altercation in the 1200 block of Moro Street around the time the Aggieville bars were closing. Moldrup said the incident began with a fight between Espinoza and Saleutogi Paga, 19, and Pati Tiumalu, 24, also of Fort Riley. Page then joined in the fight to help Espinoza, Moldrup said.

Both Espinoza and Page suffered serious injuries to their faces. According to RCPD reports, Espinoza suffered a broken nose during the altercation, and Page suffered a possible skull fracture.

Both men were treated and released at Mercy Regional Health Center.

According to RCPD reports, Catherine Mitchell, 24, of Junction City, also was injured while trying to break up the fight.

RCPD arrested Paga and Tiumalu for disorderly conduct. Paga was also arrested for aggravated battery and Tiumalu for battery. Bond was set at $5,000 for Paga and $1,000 for Tiumalu.

New mall owner to expand retail, food

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Town Center changed hands this year for the second time since its completion.

The center was sold to Urban Retail, which has helped manage the Center for two years and will make even more changes, said Ross Brookman, CEO of Urban Retail.

According to Manhattan Town Center's Web site, www.manhattantowncenter.com, the shopping center was established in 1987.

The center was developed and operated by Forest City Enterprises of Cleveland, Ohio, until 2004. MTC Development Group, along with its partner CalSTRS, sold the center to Urban Retail Properties LLC of Chicago. Urban Retail acquired the center in February 2008.

Urban Retail is responsible for managing many Midwest shopping centers.

The decision to purchase Manhattan Town Center was mutual between Urban Retail and the former owners.

"We knew it was going to be sold and started to negotiate it," Brookman said.

Some changes that can be expected are more activities in the plaza. Urban Retail is also looking to bring in new tenants.

"There's going to be a lot of thing happening in the next 12 months," Brookman said. "No stores will be closing down."

Ninety-three percent of the Center is occupied, Brookman said. Last school year, clothing store Wet Seal was incorporated into the Center, and Brookman said residents can expect more tenants like this to move in.

"Those types of tenants have always done well because of K-State," he said.

In addition to new tenants, residents will see a change in the food services. There also will be more restaurants. Brookman said Urban Retail is focusing on more sit-in restaurants as opposed to fast-food restaurants.

Downtown Manhattan is undergoing redevelopment, including 30 acres to the north and south of the 392,000-square-foot shopping center, according to Urban Retail's press release.

"Urban Retail's main goal is to enhance the asset, to increase our value and physical standpoint," Brookman said.

Possible expansion will occur within the next two years.

"Twenty-four months is typically what the time frame is," Brookman said.

In the world of shopping, progress takes time, Brookman said. Urban Retail must talk with tenants, negotiate contracts and then open up new stores.

"The community is expanding, and the pricing was appropriate," Brookman said. "We have a great start based on what's there."

PEACE CORP | Most volunteers 50+

Corps' official Web site, www.peacecorps.gov, participation will result in practical benefits like student loan deferment, career benefits like being fluent in a foreign language and skills in cross-cultural communication. Volunteers who complete two years of service receive one year of noncompetitive eligibility for employment in the federal government.

About 5 percent of the current volunteers are 50-plus years old, and this number is growing.

"I can't afford to retire now, with three kids in college," said Judi Nechols, reference librarian in the Manhattan Public Library. "But I think being a Peace Corps volunteer is a really good opportunity for people in their 50s and 60s. I think Peace Corps is the best thing the United States does to establish its good image in the world."

Information sessions about the Peace Corps will take place from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m. on April 3 and April 22 in 137 Waters Hall.

Don't be a Nader hater

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

Return candidate deserves respect, acknowledgment

ADAM PHAM

The American political process is a fickle creature.

Consider, for a moment, the roster for the presidential election. In one corner, we once had a populist attorney, John Edwards, who suffers the fate of being gone but not forgotten, and in another we have another populist attorney, Ralph Nader, who always has suffered from precisely the opposite problem.

The differences between the two are very slight – Edwards is the more accomplished lawyer, Nader the more rousing activist – yet the latter hasn't the slightest chance of ever winning an election, and the former nearly did.

We've seen a marginalization of the protest vote on a systematic level this season too.

Despite enthusiastic audiences, robust grassroots campaigns and an abundance of support, both Republican Rep. Ron Paul and Democrat Rep. Dennis Kucinich couldn't even earn invitations to their own debates. And when Nader declared his candidacy back in February, the news was buried by the fanfare of Raúl Castro's ascendancy in Havana, and hardly anyone batted an eye.

The sociologists were right all along; the very first primary occurs in the offices of bureau chiefs.

But neither Nader nor any of the other candidates are the ultimate casualty of the media's machinations – we are. Subjects without broad sex appeal generally go uncovered, ignored and eventually forgotten, and then we pay a dear price for our inattention.

To what extent? Ask yourself a question: can you name the current chief justice and the current Chairman of the Federal Reserve? If you can't, don't despair your inclusion in this overwhelming majority, but be aware: both men do have an immediate and considerable effect on your life.

And so will Nader, if we all don't tread carefully in November.

Everyone knows he has no chance of being voted in, but of what existential value is his actual message?

Is a ballot submitted for him a voice engaged in constructive dissent, or is it just misguided support for a political parasite?

For his own part, he seems earnest in his efforts, and throughout the season, he certainly will continue to play his signature role: the quintessential activist, ever in pursuit of Big Business malfeasance, and sadly, his own vanishing historical relevance.

But as noble a goal as that might be to progressives, at what cost will it come?

While it seems unlikely he will actually be able to take responsibility for a Republican victory in November – a part that he has vociferously denied ever playing in any election – the Democrats can no longer afford to not take him seriously.

A Zogby survey two weeks ago bestowed exactly the same number of percentage points to him as to the spread between either Democratic candidate and Sen. McCain.

Though torpedoing presidential elections for the purposes of protest does make him reckless and intractable, a point still can be made for Nader: He's a tireless champion of consumer causes, and yet since 2000, progressives have been his harshest critics.

Wealthy Democrats with their pledges and the ordinary Democrats with their sentiments have continued to plead with him, "Don't run for office. Don't ruin another election," oblivious to the fact that if they had paid closer attention to their own interests, he wouldn't have to run again.

Ralph Nader has earned his right to be acknowledged as a real candidate; we might not vote for him, but hopefully we don't again make the mistake of forgetting about him.

Guns should not be concealed on campuses

JOE VOSSEN

It has been nearly a year since the tragic shootings on the campus of Virginia Tech, where 32 students were murdered by a lone gunman who also took his own life. The incident rocked the campus in Blacksburg, Va., and shocked a nation into action. On Jan. 5, President Bush signed into law the most sweeping federal gun control measure in more than a decade.

The Virginia Tech massacre also refocused public attention on a debate more than two and a quarter centuries old: The right of our country's people to bear arms. According to a Mar. 18 article in The New York Times, the U.S. Supreme Court recently addressed the issue for the first time since 1939, when it heard arguments on Mar. 18 in the case of District of Columbia v. Heller. Outside the nation's highest court, the issue is front and center on college campuses.

The group Students for Concealed Carry on Campus is a national organization that advocates gun possession on the nation's campuses. (Only one state, Utah, permits gun possession on the grounds of state universities.) Proponents of gun ownership on campus believe the risks and dangers of school shootings would be mitigated by allowing students to carry weapons and protect themselves and others.

Since the campus shootings at Northern Illinois University on Feb. 14, the group's membership has surged from 14,000 to 23,000, according to its Web site, www.concealedcampus.org. A K-State chapter of Students for Concealed Carry was recently established, and according to Kansas Federation of SCCC President Ryan Willcott, freshman in pre-professional business administration, its organization already has grown to 195 members.

According to the Kansas Attorney General's Web site, more than 11,000 Kansans have applied for a concealed carry permit since the Personal and Family Protection Act was signed in 2006. If the right to bear arms is extended to campuses, the potential hazards could outweigh any benefits.

The motives of gun owners who want the right to bring their firearms to campus are pure: They want a safer campus and a secure learning environment. They point out that strict gun control regulations on campuses do not deter violent gun crimes from occurring at colleges and universities.

But escalation is not the answer. Allowing firearms on our university campuses would give rise to more gun-related incidents than it would prevent. The college environment is known for drugs, drinking and the stresses of class and preparing for a future career. Can you imagine what might happen in a beer-induced brawl at a Saturday tailgate when guns were introduced to the mix?

In a CBS Evening News report on March 27, University of Georgia Police Chief Jimmy Williamson said that making weapons legal on campuses would make an officer's job more difficult in the event of a school shooting. Officers could find it harder to spot the real threat if a gunfight erupted between students and shooters.

"There's only going to be a split-second there, and I could see innocent people being shot by police," he said. "There is no way to estimate how many additional victims would be killed in crossfire between criminals, armed students and law enforcement officials."

Incidents like those in Virginia and Illinois certainly require us to examine our gun control policies. Though new gun control legislation – like that approved by President Bush in January – makes it harder for criminals to obtain firearms, there are still considerable gaps in our mental health-care system. As Virginia Tech showed us, it can be easier for a student suffering from mental-health disorders to purchase a weapon than a convicted criminal.

Putting guns in the hands of college students is a knee-jerk reaction to devastating tragedies but is not the long-term solution that will make us safer.

I just saw a squirrel with a mullet.

Are they building a 7-Eleven by the dorms or something?

Having KU win is kind of a slap in the face.

Fact: Chuck Norris is the only person ever to win a staring contest against Ray Charles and Stevie Wonder at the same time.

I'm a single white male looking for a good girl that will enjoy candlelit dinners and long walks on the treadmill.

I'm sick of this country being run by rich white people.

Thank you to the lovely lady that saved my life wherever you found me Saturday morning. Facebook me.

To the guy who's looking for a good girl: Don't give up on love. It's real, and it's out there. You just need to know where to look.

You do not break into "Star Trek" to tell me something about the friggin' Jayhawks. I am never watching your station again.

To the girl that claimed on Friday there are good girls left: Where are they? Because I don't believe you.

I really appreciate the new iSIS system. I'm supposed to be enrolling now, and it won't let me.

Am I the only one that thinks Mario Chalmers wears make-up and eyeliner during basketball games?

Yeah, that homeless guy who was at Starbucks was one of our geology faculty.

I've had so much caffeine, I actually feel like I'm somehow moving slower.

SafeRide is for amateurs.

Anyone that doesn't like the Classy Cats is either a girl with low self-esteem or a guy that likes butt sex.

Thank you, Matt Combes. My teddy bear is no longer safe.

I'm pretty sure I just saw a girl wearing rain boots. Those would be boots without the fur.

KU is in the Final Four, and K-State fans shouldn't care because they're not rivals. So get over it.

Today's cryptoquip clue sucks.

Has K-State even heard the words "national championship?" Oh, wait. Yeah, they have. In debate. My bad.

Sweatpants are comfortable.

I just designed an ad for foot fungus, and now my feet really itch.

I just took a shot of whiskey and chased it with a Snack Pak.

To the chick wearing the Ugg boots and the short shorts on a cold day: It's cold. Put some pants on.

So, I just saw someone run into my car and drive away. But then I realized it wasn't my car, so it's OK.

Whatever happened to those crispy M&M's?

The Goo Goo Dolls let me down. They're supposed to be my friends.

MUSLIM WOMEN | U.S. dating customs different

Americans as well, she said.

"You expect to see skyscrapers everywhere, but there are places like Manhattan – small and quiet," Ibbini said.

Ahlam Al-Rawi, an Iraqi who moved to the U.S. in 1986, said her preconceived ideas about the U.S. weren't entirely accurate either. "The thing that shocked me is that my expectations about America were much higher than what I saw: low standards of living, poor people in the streets and so on," she said.

"Global media supports the Western culture more than it supports us," Al-Rawi said. "You look at TV screen and see movies that portray America positively. Muslims are portrayed as women in black, poor and repressed. They never show you the bright side of our lives."

Al-Rawi moved to the U.S. with her two children and husband, who was working on his doctorate in mathematics. Her third child was born in the U.S.

In 2000, Al-Rawi earned her doctorate in physics.

According to the Muslim Women's League Web site, "Spiritual equality, responsibility and accountability for both men and women is a well-developed theme in the Quran."

Muslim women see themselves as free and independent, respected, not oppressed, so they do not feel the need to adopt Western values and norms.

"We want people to know more about us, to know that we are not oppressed," Al-Rawi said. "We are not much different than other women."

One of the differences is that Muslims avoid dating, and sex before marriage is a sin.

"We don't have boyfriends in our teenage lives, so we are more focused on our studies," Ibbini said.

Ibbini got married at 27, which is considered an age of maturity.

When she met her husband, they both decided within a short time to get engaged. They both were mature enough to sit at a table and discuss their futures together. Ibbini said she had a certain set of questions to find out if he was right for her.

For example, she said she wanted to finish her education; he agreed this was a good idea.

"You don't need to invest emotionally, as you don't know whether this relationship will lead to marriage or not. Relationships could lead to a lot of trauma – you don't wanna go through it," Ibbini said. "Having a marriage without Western-style dating works for me. Love comes stronger when it's not based on physical attraction," she said.

Ibbini also shared her views on economic independence of women in Islam.

Her non-Muslim friends are often surprised when they hear Muslim women do not spend their salary on rent or similar expenses.

"The money you earn is something extra for yourself," she said. "You may willingly share this money with a family. It is considered a charity if you give money to your husband, because you don't have to."

Muslim women see headwear as a means of expressing self-respect and dignity.

They say it is their choice to wear a hijab, and they do not see it as a problem.

"Freedom is not how short your clothes are and how many boyfriends you have. That is not freedom," Al-Rawi said. "Islam is not harsh. It is a very reasonable religion – it makes sense.

"It restricts you, it stops your desires ... That's why there are some limitations in our lives."

ISIS | System improves identification methods

been using it for several years.

"It's hard to compare the two," she said. "The main reason we implemented iSIS is because we needed to move into a newer technology. It's more flexible to work with other systems like K-State Online.

"I think the students like everything on one page in the student center. It uses more current technology, so for instance, when students enroll they end up with a shopping cart. It uses the kind of technology that students are more used to."

Students use both KATS and iSIS for different tasks. KATS still is used to enroll for summer and for many financial reasons like checking student accounts, but iSIS is used for tasks like looking at a DARS report and enrolling for fall 2008.

Gehrt said by fall 2008, all student business will be done in iSIS, and KATS will be phased out completely.

Aimee Hagedorn, communications director for the Information Technology Assistance Center, said early last week the IT Help Desk received calls about enrollment problems. She said there was an issue where graduate students could not enroll in certain classes because of a glitch in the system.

"I haven't experienced any other problems," she said. "It's exciting news for us that it works."

Kyle Hiller, fifth-year student in electrical engineering, said he noticed when enrolling that iSIS regulates enrollment for classes with pre-requisites, when KATS did not. However, he said he is not sure if he likes the new system better than the old.

"[iSIS is] a little awkward compared to KATS," Hiller said.

Another enrollment change is improvements in the waiting list process, Gehrt said. If a seat opens up for a full class and a student is next on the wait list, enrollment is automatic for that student, and they will receive an e-mail notification.

Students also can view the total number of seats available for a class, the number of seats open and the number of people wait-listed for a class, she said. According to iSIS information on K-State's Web site, the university is implementing the new system for many reasons including to move from an outdated and unsupported mainframe student system and to improve the enrollment process.

Gehrt said one of the biggest advantages of iSIS is it will help better protect social security numbers.

She said with KATS and the previous underlying system SIS, Social Security numbers were used as student identifiers.

"This system allows us to no longer use the Social Security number as the primary identifying number," she said. "It will help with identity protection. We haven't had any problems with that, but it is more of a prevention."

Social Security numbers still will be used in the system along with birthdates, because Gehrt said those are necessary in some instances, like financial aid. However, she said only central employees who have to know that information will be able to see it.

Gehrt said the system had a live test for enrollment before spring break, and it allowed the project coordinators to look over any issues before everyone started enrolling March 24.

She said different issues might arise as different groups of students enroll, as was the case with the graduate students last week, but Gehrt said they should be able to work through any problems.

Gehrt said students should have patience when working with the new system, and if they have any problems they should report them to the IT Help Desk so administrators can work through those issues quickly.

K-State to wrap up 9-game Tointon series against Bears

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team hopes to keep its momentum rolling as it finishes up a nine-game home stand with a mid-week, two-game series against the Central Arkansas Bears. The first game in the series is at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Wildcats (13-12) are coming off a series win against fellow Big 12 Conference rival and the team who fields the most productive offense in the league, Oklahoma State. K-State won a series with the No. 22-ranked Cowboys for the first time since 2000 and have won six of seven on their current home stretch.

Coach Brad Hill said his team was pressing earlier in the season and thinking about what they were doing wrong, but he continues to give his team the same message for success.

"If you make an out, don't worry about it," Hill said. "If you make an error, don't worry about it. Just get out there and compete and let the chips fall where they may."

IF YOU GO ...
K-State vs. Central Arkansas
6:30 tonight
Tointon Family Stadium
Radio - KMAN-AM 1350

A streaky Central Arkansas team heads into tonight's contest with a little bit of a skid, losing their last three games. The Bears (12-15) have never lost more than three games in a row the whole season, but they have had two occasions this year where they have lost three straight games. In the games immediately following the trio of loses, Central Arkansas has bounced back and won both of their other games following three game slides.

Getting the start for K-State will be pitcher A.J. Morris. He will face the Bears' Reese Cross. Hill said the team can't overlook this game for any reason, and the main goal is for the Wildcats to avoid disappointment.

"We can't get a sense of a letdown," he said. "They're throwing their No. 1 ERA guy at us tomorrow. They have played everyone extremely close."

Hill said Central Arkansas shouldn't be taken lightly because the Bears have had success against teams K-State has struggled against.

"They beat Texas-San Antonio, and we lost to them twice," he said. "We have to get on a run because every game is important to us."

Hill said it's important for the Wildcats to keep the wins coming against the Bears, especially since they have to travel to Texas A&M over the weekend.

"It's all about momentum," Hill said. "Just try to be more consistent. We just need guys to give us quality at-bats all the time. We just need to keep it going."

Men's golf team to meet 3 top-50 teams in Wichita Shocker Classic

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After capturing its first tournament title in more than four years, the K-State men's golf team has returned to Kansas to compete in the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic.

The two-day tournament, which is taking place at the par-71 Wichita Country Club, began at 8 a.m. Monday with a shotgun start. The first two rounds were played Monday and the third round will begin at 8 a.m. today, also with a shotgun start.

A score update was not available at press time.

The 16-team field is highlighted by three teams ranked in the top-50 by Golfweek.com, including tournament host No. 26 Wichita State, defending tournament champion No. 46 University of Texas at Arlington, and No. 48 Southern Methodist University. Other notable participants include Oklahoma Christian and Oklahoma City, ranked No. 1 and No. 3 in the NAIA, respectively, and K-State's Big 12 Conference counterparts Iowa State and Nebraska.

Senior Kyle Yonke hits off the tee at Colbert Hills. Yonke and the rest of the Wildcats are facing off in the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic in Wichita Monday and today.

K-State's lineup is headlined by sophomore duo Mitchell Gregson and Joe Ida. The two team leaders have competed in every event this season, and they have a total of five top-5 finishes between them. Also competing for the Wildcats is junior Robert Streb, another mainstay in the Wildcats' lineup this season. Senior Kyle Yonke, coming off his strongest performance of the 2007-08 campaign at the Ron Moore Invitational, will make his fourth consecutive appearance in the lineup.

Redshirt freshman Ross Geubelle will occupy the fifth spot in the lineup, making this his second straight tournament. Freshmen Daniel Wood and Kyle Smell also will compete as individuals for K-State. This is Wood's fourth consecutive appearance – his second straight as an individual – and Smell's first action since the Braveheart Classic on March 4.

After a sub-par showing at the Fresno Lexus Classic on March 10-11, the Wildcats bounced back to win the Ron Moore Invitational on March 21-23. The team has finished in the top-10 in all but one tournament this season, including six top-5 finishes.

Athletic offices announce refund policy

The Kansas State Athletic Department announced Monday the refund policy for the Gridiron Bash events.

The Gridiron Bash, which was to feature concerts, pep rallies and fan competitions, was slated to take place on 16 campuses across the nation during spring practice.

Those who purchased Goo Goo Dolls tickets online at www.k-statesports.com will either receive an e-mail notification or be contacted directly with refund instructions from the K-State ticket office. All credit card purchases will be automatically refunded to the same card used for the purchase. Those who purchased Goo Goo Dolls tickets in person at the Kansas State Athletics Ticket Office and would like a refund must return the tickets in person to the ticket office with proof of purchase.

If tickets were purchased online through gridironbash.com or tickets.com, please contact gridironbash.com for refunds and for more information.

Numerous events will be held in or around Bill Snyder Family Stadium on April 17-19 to celebrate K-State's Spring Fan Fest, including a three-day Ottaway carnival beginning Thursday, April 17, in the east parking lot of the stadium. On Friday, April 18, the annual Powercat Auction will be held in Bramlage Coliseum. And on Saturday, April 19 leading up to the spring football game, there will be a barbecue contest in Cat Town, Willie's Fun Zone in the indoor football complex and the All-University Open House. The Purple-White game will kick at 6:30 p.m., and will be followed by an autograph session on the playing field.

Eric Gordon, Indiana

Beasley named AP 1st team All-American

Freshman forward Michael Beasley became just the second player in school history to earn first team All-America honors from The Associated Press on Monday, as he joined North Carolina's Tyler Hansbrough as the only unanimous selections by the organization.

Beasley and Hansbrough joined St. Joseph's Jameer Nelson and Connecticut's Emeka Okafor in 2004 and Duke's J.J. Redick and Gonzaga's Adam Morrison in 2006 as unanimous tandems. It also marked the first time that no senior was chosen to the first team.

Beasley joins Bob Boozer as the only players in K-State history to earn first team All-America honors from The Associated Press. Boozer was named to the first team after his outstanding 1959 season.

Overall, Beasley is just the fifth player in school history to earn recognition to any of organization's three All-America teams, joining Rolando Blackman, Boozer, Mike Evans and Dick Knostman.

Royals show fresh attitude

Alex Gordon hit a home run, and overall, the Kansas City Royals looked like a pretty good team Monday in their opening day performance against the Detroit Tigers, a 5-4 win in the 11th inning.

JOEL JELLISON

Opening the season against the Tigers looks like a good test for the young Royals team as key additions in the offseason made Detroit an instant contender for the World Series title.

With a new manager and a new attitude, the Royals looked like a legitimate challenger in the American League Central, as they came from behind and stopped the Tigers from scoring additional runs, forcing the game into extra innings.

More importantly, Monday marked the start of a new season for Major League Baseball and a new season for Royals fans to bite their fingernails and stay on the edge of their seats in close games.

Last season seemed usual for Royals fans, as they were constantly banging their heads against the wall wondering how Kansas City just blew another lead.

But the pitching looks better this season. Even Leo Nunez, who has struggled at times with the Royals, pitched a solid two innings Monday with just one walk and three strikeouts. Gil Meche was shaky for Kansas City at times but came out all right in the end. Possibly the best performance was from closer Joakim Soria, who recorded his first save, striking out one player and stranding the tying run at third base.

On the offensive side of the ball, Kansas City recorded 10 hits and five runs and Gordon had two RBIs along with his home run. Mark Grudzielanek was one of the key performers Monday, showing why he is the team veteran with three hits in four attempts including an RBI and a stolen base. The bad statistic for the Royals was in strikeouts, where they went down at the plate 10 times.

But what does the performance on opening day mean for the Royals? Only time will tell if the Royals continually can play teams like they did the Tigers or if the bullpen will be able to hold up the performance on a regular basis. And what will David DeJesus' injury early in the game mean for the centerfield position for the rest of the season?

If you are a Royals fan, however, you have to feel good about the way the Royals played against the Tigers, knocking off another high-powered offensive team on opening day as they did last season when they teed off on Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling.

Obviously, it's too early to tell whether the Royals will be more successful than last season or whether they will suffer a collapse midway through the season. The one thing Royals fans can have, as they do every season, is hope.

Mutant squirrels stomp through campus

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Giant, mutant red-tailed squirrels were seen throwing nuts at students early this morning.

"I looked out the window, and it was just standing there looking at me, not even in a tree" said Joanna Moysen, sophomore in dietetics, who was sitting in a classroom on the second floor of Justin Hall at the time. "It was amazing. I've never seen anything like it before. Everyone in class was just staring out the window in awe."

These mutant squirrels, averaging in height about 45 feet tall, stomped their way through campus ravaging trees and the ground in search of nuts and flowers.

No one knows where they came from, but they apparently made their way from Dole Hall all the way to Anderson Hall, where they destroyed the flower beds behind President Jon Wefald's office.

John Woods, director of Facilities Services, said this location has always been a hot spot for squirrels.

"They don't usually eat all of the flowers, so we try to plant enough for them and for us," Woods said. "We try to work around them, but I'm not sure what we're going to do in this case."

Woods said the squirrels left huge footprints all over campus and dug holes the size of caverns to hide their acorns.

"We just tried to stay out of their way," Woods said. "We also called for backup from the military and tried to do whatever [the squirrels] wanted us to do."

Though no one was physically injured, Counseling Services will be available for extended hours this week to offer counseling to anyone who might be suffering long-term shock or nightmares from the Godzilla-like attack.

The mammoth squirrels caused thousands of dollars worth of damage.

"It could take several months to repair the damage they caused," Woods said. "We might have to postpone Open House to make sure the grounds look good again."

Woods said in order to ensure the safety of students in the future, facilities will have to work harder to build larger, stronger squirrel traps.

Student Body president morphs into wildcat after being attacked

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body President Matt Wagner was just minding his own business last Thursday night. He said he left the Student Governing Association meeting at about 12:45 a.m. and was walking to his car, which was parked in the Alumni Center parking lot.

"I was walking between Old Stadium and the Alumni Center when I heard a low growl, but I couldn't figure out what it was," Wagner said. "And then all of a sudden I was attacked by the bronze Wildcat statue."

He said the lighting was very dim, and he couldn't tell exactly what it was.

"It bit my leg and then took off running toward Old Stadium."

Wagner said he has been feeling some werewolf-like effects ever since the attack.

"During the day I'm fine – no one would even know what's going on," he said. "But at night, I grow hair on my face and chest, and I've been growling a lot in the evening, which isn't normal for me."

He said his mood and temperament also have changed a lot throughout the evening hours. He hasn't had much sleep lately because of his new interest in prowling around on campus looking for students to bite.

"My slogan is 'Once a Wildcat, always a Wildcat,' so if I can be one in real life, that's even better," he said. "I just want to go out and bite people to make them Wildcats too."

Wagner said he started noticing the transformation Friday and Saturday night. He said he avoided going to Lafene Health Center because he was concerned they would just tell him he's pregnant – which, in his opinion, is far worse than being told he's a Wildcat.

This is the first announcement Wagner has made to friends, family and campus about his new lifestyle. He said he wanted to tell his fiancée sooner but couldn't find the right time.

"I'm not sure if anyone else has been bitten like I have been," he said. "But I really wonder if [Student Body Vice President and President-elect] Lydia Peele has been."

"Wildcat" Wagner said he'll probably keep his prowling contained to the Manhattan area.

"It's really hard to recruit off campus."

THE DAILY WILDCAT TRANSFORMATION

Openness, size, stairs of Hale library safest bet in case of zombie invasion

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nuclear fallout, chemical warfare, rage-infected monkeys and mutated rabies-cure strains – whatever the cause, we all know the dead eventually will walk ... or run.

And they'll be interested in either eating our brains or snacking on pretty much any part of the human anatomy.

Our campus is fortunate to have several buildings that easily are fortified for such an occasion. Among them, Hale Library is a viable candidate.

Hale would need to be cleared of zombies first. It would be relatively easy, though, considering most of the zombies will probably be napping in the 24-hour study room. (Zombies traditionally continue habits developed while alive.)

"[Hale] is a big enough place for lots of people to fit, and it's an open area, so you can see if any zombies are around," said Lydia Peele, student body vice president and president-elect. "I think in reality, if we're worried about zombies, we need to prepare for the worst situation."

Hale has only two entrances, which allows for minimal defense needs. Two to four gunmen per door would be more than enough to hold off zombies with enough raw material blocking the doors.

The third and fourth floors can be used as the "living rooms" where all the non-zombie survivors can hold out, until everybody gets sick of being alive and tries to go somewhere else.

The stairs can be destroyed between the second and third floor, with a retractable ladder in place instead. That way zombies can't take the stairs, and everybody knows zombies can't climb ladders. The elevator would also have to be disabled if the power is still on.

Food might be an issue over time. If it is, survivors will have to find their way to one of the dining halls for fresh supplies.

The fifth floor can be the lookout-tower area. It's high enough to communicate with other survivors unlucky enough to be stranded in buildings like Waters or Willard.

Students would have a wide variety of sources for hired gunmen.

"I am interested to have some discussions with the pirates and ninjas," Peele, senior in mathematics education, said. "[I want] to see if they have some kind of zombie defense plan so we can all work together for the protection of our university and all students at K-State."

FOLDABLE 70-INCH HD E-PAPER TV

Why hang your TV on the wall or keep it sitting on a table when you can fold it up and keep it in your pocket? The Foldable 70-inch HD e-paper TV allows you to do just that, providing all the quality and benefits of a huge plasma screen on a surface that can be rolled up or folded for easy storage and portability. Tote it around in your briefcase for presentations, stick it in your backpack to always have it wherever you go, or simply move it from room to room in your house without breaking a sweat. Built with a special material that prevents wrinkles and creases, it's designed to withstand all the folding you can throw at it, making it not only the lightest and most portable TV around, but also the most durable.

TEMPORAL VISION MONITOR

Is the wait for the new season of Lost slowly killing you? There's no waiting with the Temporal-Vision Monitor — just use the special +/- Time buttons on the remote to advance the day, week, month or year to tune in to the yet-to-be-produced show you want to peek in on. Surf the future airwaves to find out which pilots get picked up next year or what happens in the final episode of Desperate Housewives. The TV Monitor also works in reverse, so you can cue up past landmark events, such as Edward R. EYEPOD SPY SATELLITE TRACKER

The days when your personal music collection and the security of your nation were handled by different devices are over. The eyePod is everything you want in a portable music player, with the added bonus of being able to view the live feed from any spy satellite in orbit. Just select "SpySat" from the main menu to browse the feeds by continent, distance or political affiliation. You can even bookmark specific geographical sites that you want to keep tabs on and organize them into spylists, in case you want to put, say, terrorist sites in one folder and ex-girlfriends' houses in another. Don't see the feed you want? Buy it from the eyeTunes store for just $9,999 per feed.

DVD HOLOGRAM PROJECTOR

Watch your favorite films in full 3-D glory, the way they were meant to be experienced, with the Holomex DVD Hologram Projector. Accepting both standard DVD discs as well as specially designed Holodiscs, the Holomex can create 3-D holograms from standard 2-D films or project holographic images straight from a disc. Adjustable projection size allows for holograms to be created from as large as 7 feet high to as small as 4 inches. Special thermodynamic projecting keeps images clear even in bright rooms, although it's recommended to set up the projector in front of a light-colored wall for best effect.

"I think that there hasn't been satisfactory negotiations on this bill at this point," Carlin said. "There are two major problems with this: [Kansas Corporation Commission] would lose oversight, and it still has no real reduction in CO2 emissions. That means we'd be looking at 11 million tons of CO2 emission into our atmosphere every year."

Without the oversight of KCC, increases in energy would no longer have regulation. KCC protects citizens from dramatic increases and warns them when an increase might be coming, Carlin said.

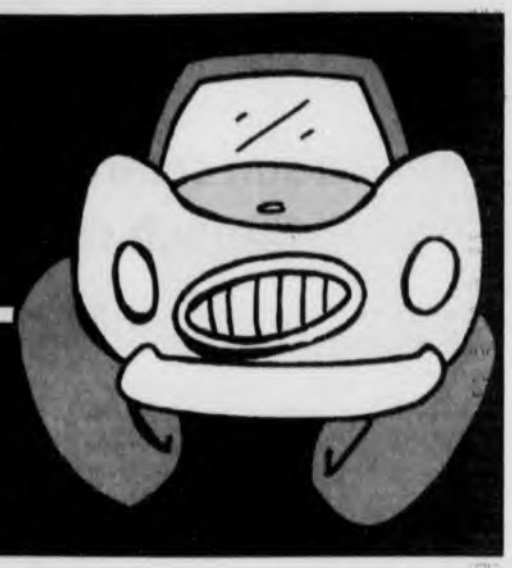
The use of wind energy also is making an appearance on the edited bill. Carlin said a supplemental on the bill would enact a tariff on those who utilize wind energy. Wind energy users would pay a tax to continue their energy-efficient methods.

"I'm just hoping there might be some amendments on the bill that will give us some clear standards to work on it," Carlin said. "The idea is that we need to make a better bill, and the actuality is that this bill is just the same thing with lipstick on it."

Some members of the Senate did not share Sebellius' concerns regarding the bill. Sen. Pat Apple, R-Louisburg, said he thinks the key problem is attempting to regulate CO2 emissions without regulations.

"I know that we passed [the bill] and had strong support in the Kansas Senate for the original bill that was vetoed by the governor," Apple said. "I think the primary support for that bill came from the concerns of the secretary of [the Kansas Department of Health and Environment] regulating CO2 when there was a question as to the authority to regulate CO2, and of course there were other issues."

Apple said a 120-page report was released by the KDHE granting staff approval of the plant's expansion and declaring the mercury emissions were 80 percent below what the EPA allows. This amount would not threaten vegetation, soils or the atmosphere, which was the original concern.



"The only concern that surfaced after the report was done was based upon CO2 emissions and the real issue of trying to regulate without regulations puts you in a position where you are arbitrary," Apple said.

Apple compared the situation to allowing individuals to drive down the highway without traffic laws and then having police regulate driving - impossible to do without guidelines by which to judge.

Electronics stolen from station

An example of the Pavilion computer. At Walmart.com a Pavilion computer sells this for $898.

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Electronics valued at $1,660 were stolen from a Riley County transfer station at 1881 Henton Road sometime between Saturday and Tuesday, according to a Riley County Police report.

Manhattan residents Mario Perez and Ronson Strom stored their personal possessions at the transfer station. Stolen was a Kodak camera, a DVD player, one Hewlett-Packard Pavilion laptop computer, four flash drives, a wireless mouse, 15 DVDs, a PlayStation game console, eight PlayStation games, one pellet gun with pellets and an RCA camcorder, said RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup.

In another RCPD report, a 2000 Jeep Wrangler was stolen and recovered. Manhattan resident Kylee Naylor reported the vehicle stolen on March 28.

According to the report, the vehicle was found parked at 1200 Vattier St. at 12:36 a.m. on April 1. Moldrup said everything inside the vehicle was recovered except the keys.

Dusty Garner, sophomore in political science, disc jockeys as Monica Moree at Club Heat at P.J.'s Bar every Tuesday night. Club Heat was started by Garner on Dec. 4, 2007, because he said the last gay event like it in Manhattan was 10 years before that. Dusty accomplished this by promising to bring a large turnout, which was helped by a Facebook.com group dedicated to the cause. Dusty sees Club Heat as a safe place for students to go, other than Rock-A-Belly Deli in Aggieville. He describes P.J.'s as a place were metal heads and drag queens collide.

COMING TO K-STATE

Evolution of Dance

COURTESY PHOTO

Famous comedian, dancer to perform, speak tonight

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An inspirational comedian and the creator of the widely viewed YouTube.com video, "The Evolution of Dance," will be at K-State tonight.

Judson Laipply will perform at 7.30 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

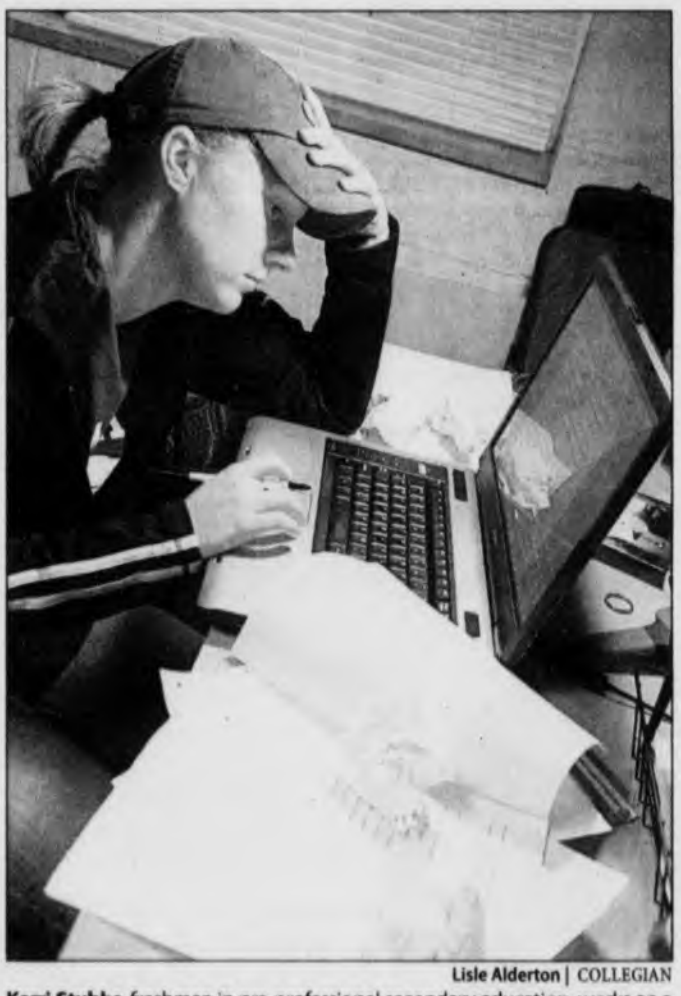
Most people know Laipply, a comedian from Clevelend, Ohio, from his six-minute video on YouTube that has been viewed more than 80 million times.

But Hannah McSpadden, arts co-chair for Union Program Council, said he's actually an "amazing motivational speaker."

He has helped many students use comedy for the betterment of their daily lives, she said.

Laipply will present his most popular program, "Inspirational Comedy," which makes the audience laugh while he conveys his views about life.

The most popular part of the show is the finale: "The Evolution of Dance."



"I personally like his dance because it truly is an evolution of all of the dances throughout the decade," McSpadden, sophomore in agribusiness, said. "He is very funny to watch and helps people remember all of the old songs and dances that he smashed into one dance."

UPC will sponsor the event along with Student Health Advisory Committee, Student Governing Association, Sexual Awareness Peer Educators, Phi Delta Theta fraternity and Leadership Studies and Programs.

"We expect a great turnout at this event with many excited people there," McSpadden said.

Admission is free and open to student, faculty, staff and the public.

Polls show students stressed about the future

College students could be facing more stress because of parental and societal pressure to succeed, according to an Associated Press poll.

The survey, titled "Stress Pains Many in College," was conducted for the Associated Press and MTV. Students between the ages of 18 and 24 were given the questionnaires at 40 randomly chosen four-year schools around the country. The results showed exactly what students were stressed about and how those stresses affected their lives.

Barbara Pearson, K-State counseling services psychologist, said the reason students might be more stressed in college is because parents could be pushing their children to be involved in many different groups in addition to making good grades.

"There is a lot of pressure from our culture to really succeed in everything," Pearson said. "Individuals may also feel they need to do a tremendous amount to succeed."

Though there is no universal form of stress because each person goes through different situations, Pearson said, people

FACTS ABOUT STRESS

More than a quarter of students sometimes think they should cut down on drinking or going out.

College women have a more stressful existence than men, with 45 percent of females and 34 percent of males saying they face pressure often.

Six in 10 women and just four in 10 men say family issues cause problems, though the differences between the sexes in most areas are slimmer.

DHS to draft Environmental Statement for proposed NBAF locations

GLOSSARY OF TECHNICAL TERMS

— Environmental Impact Statement (EIS): A document required of federal agencies by the National Environmental Policy Act for significant federal actions that might significantly affect the quality of the environment.

— National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility (NBAF): A proposed facility that would address current and future requirements in research, diagnostics and training for combating high-consequence agricultural threats. Research would focus on early development and discovery of vaccines and diagnostic tests for these important agricultural diseases.

— National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA): Requires the preparation of an environmental impact statement (EIS) for significant federal actions that might signficantly affect the qualit of the environment.

— Department of Homeland Security Web site

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the first article in a four-part series examining K-State as a proposed site for the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility, the facility's purpose and its potential effects on the Manhattan residents and the K-State community if Manhattan is selected in October 2008.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed legislation Friday that will provide infrastructure improvements in efforts to bring the National Bio and Agro-Defense Facility to Kansas.

Senate Substitute for House Bill 2001 authorizes the issuance of $105 million in revenue bonds to support a capital improvement project relating to NBAF. The bonds will be used to buy land, upgrade roads, install a security fence and build a utility plant.

"This bill demonstrates that the NBAF continues to be our state's top bioscience priority," said Sebelius in a press release Friday. "The efforts to be the home of this facility have always been strengthened by our existing resources and broad support of the NBAF Task Force."

In January, the Kansas Bioscience Authority announced a $2.5 million Collaborative Biosecurity Research Initiative to bring together researchers nationwide for biosecurity research. The initiative will provide up to $500,000 for research projects in partnership with researchers at K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute, said Ron Trewyn, K-State's vice president for research.

K-State has distributed information about research at BRI to about 10 institutions, including the University of Kansas, the University of Missouri-Columbia, Auburn University and Lovelace with the University of New Mexico.

"We haven't got anybody officially lined up yet," Trewyn said. "We've got the commitments to support the initiative to get NBAF, but we don't have the commitments to KBA yet."

Manhattan is one of six finalists for the NBAF, which would be located adjacent to the BRI if Manhattan is selected. Since the Department of Homeland Security's presentation in fall 2007 at K-State, information has been collected for Manhattan's Environmental Impact Statement. University administration also has visited Washington, D.C., and discussed the need for NBAF.

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENT

The Department of Homeland Security is preparing a draft NBAF Environmental Impact Statement based on scoping comments received from each proposed site. Dial Cordy and Associates Inc., an environmental consulting firm, worked with Mary Lou Marino, development director for K-State's Office of Research and Sponsored Programs; Manhattan City Manager Ron Fehr; and a state-wide committee appointed during the 2007 state legislative session.

Marino led K-State's collection of the information with the City of Manhattan and the Kansas Biosciences Authority. Dial Cordy and Associates Inc. collected information from mid November 2007 through Jan. 31. The Kansas Historical Society, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Kansas Biological Survey also provided information about Manhattan's proposed site.

The statement itself will not serve as the deciding factor on whether NBAF should be

Ag Fest concert to raise money for MS research

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Agriculture Student Council will raise money for multiple sclerosis research next week as part of the annual Ag Fest.

Ag Fest will begin on Monday and will end with a benefit concert on Friday, April 11. The concert, known as the "Ag for a Cure Benefit Concert," will be at 8 p.m. in Weber Arena. All proceeds for the concert will go to the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Mark Maynard, Ag Fest co-chairman, said the purpose of Ag Fest is to help a good cause and educate people on what the College of Agriculture does and how it helps K-State and Manhattan.

"Our hope is to expand ag interest at the university and in the community," he said. "[We want to] try to get people to know more about the college."

Maynard, senior in agricultural economics, said the benefit concert helps raise awareness and interest in the College of Agriculture by attracting those who might have little knowledge of the college.

"This is the second year we've done the concert," he said. "Last year was a huge success. The concert really helps bring kids into the college."

Other events during the week include a panel discussing the benefits and disadvantages of the ethanol industry, a cook-out on the lawn of Weber Hall and a Cowboy Olympics, which Maynard said involves activities important to many agricultural students.

"It's basically a bunch of barnyard, chore-type sports," he said. Pushing a truck, driving a T-post into the ground, and filling feed sacks were possible activities that Maynard mentioned.

Also, elementary school students will be on campus April 8 to watch presentations and performances by various organizations in the college, he said.

Bleu Edmondson will open the April 11 concert, followed by the Randy Rogers Band. Tickets can be purchased at Tractor Supply, the K-State Union Bookstore, Varney's, Longhorns Saloon or from any Ag Council representative. Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 at the door. Main floor seats are $3 extra.

Maynard said he hopes the concert and the rest of the week will clear up some misconceptions about agricultural students.

"We want to show everybody that we're not just a bunch of plow pushers," he said.

"AG FOR A CURE BENEFIT CONCERT"

— Doors open at 7:30 p.m. April 11. The concert starts at 8 in Weber Arena.
— Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 at the door. Patrons can buy main floor seat tickets for $3 extra.

OTHER AG FEST ACTIVITIES

Monday — "Are We Moving Forward?" panel discussion on the ethanol industry in Forum Hall, sponsored by Frontier Farm Credit
Tuesday — Agricultural awareness activities for children in kindergarten through 3rd grade in Weber Arena
Wednesday — Cowboy Olympics in Weber Arena, hosted by the KSU Rodeo Club, in Weber Arena
April 10 — Cook-out on the Weber Hall lawn hosted by FarmHouse and Alpha Gamma Rho fraternities — meat donated by Cargill

CITY COMMISSION

Housing discrimination addressed by commission

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mayor Tom Phillips encouraged citizens of Manhattan to fight discrimination by raising awareness of fair-housing laws within the city. Phillips declared the month of April "Fair Housing Month" to address the issue and give it more publicity at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

STRAWN

"[Raising the awareness of discrimination] is how we are going to keep our community free of discrimination in the future," said Larry Hackney, human resources specialist.

Hackney said Manhattan's percentage of housing discrimination has been negligible in the past.

Consent Agenda items passed 5-0-0 vote by the commission. The items included improvements to various intersections around Manhattan, street improvement contracts, road surveys and storm gutter projects.

Commissioner Bruce Snead announced that a meeting will be put on by the city engineer on Thursday to discuss how Manhattan can become a more bicycle-friendly community. Snead encouraged anyone interested to attend. The recommendations from this discussion will help the city engineer design plans to include safer bicycling paths around the community by using interested citizens' input. The meeting will be in the Commission Room at City Hall.

A sidewalk café and display permit ordinance carried 4-0-1. Commissioner James Sherow abstained from the voting process due to possible conflict of interest.

Another item on the agenda will rezone Stone Pointe Townhomes to a public utility district. It passed with a vote of 5-0-0.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Commissioner Bob Strawn wished his wife a happy 41st Anniversary by announcing, "I'd do it all over again."

Who's the radical?

Film should not be condemned but studied

BRETT KING

The week passed for most citizens of the United States with little awareness of the powder keg ready to blow in Europe. Last week in the Netherlands, Geert Wilders released his documentary rant against radical Islam. As with the infamous cartoon of the Prophet Muhammad with a bomb in his turban, which is displayed at the start of the film with a ticking clock, a fuse has been lit for problems throughout Europe.

After trying many times to air his documentary on Dutch TV, Wilders finally released "Fitna," which in Arabic means "strife," over the Internet. According to Hollywoodreporter.com on March 27, "Fitna" had more than 1.6 million views "within two hours of the posting."

The 15-minute documentary displays quotes that encourage violence from the Quran as well as video clips from Muslim political leaders, clerics and Imams who promote violence against Jews, Americans and other Westerners.

"Fitna" ends with a ripping sound and encourages Muslims to rip out violent passages of the Quran.

Racial divides in Europe have increased substantially over the past decades as Muslims have immigrated to many European countries. Refusing to integrate to European society and committing themselves to continue the practice of Sharia law within the borders of their host country has produced a difficult situation for many within their borders.

The Netherlands is not a stranger to violence caused by radical Islam. The assassination of Theo Van Gogh because of his film "Submission," and riots sparked by the cartoon of the Prophet Muhammad have created a strong divide between Muslims and Dutch citizens.

Though Wilders and his film have been pegged as anti-Islamic, Wilders said in a March 22 New York Times Article, "I believe the Islamic theology is a retarded, dangerous one, but I make a distinction. I don't hate people. I don't hate Muslims ... I am not saying all Muslims are wrong or are terrorists or criminals. You will never hear me say that."

"Fitna" once again shows the double standard on the concept of hate speech. Though many Islamic countries and the Secretary General of the United Nations have condemned this film as a form of hate speech, this film has no reason to be justified as criminal.

Speeches featured in the movie follow much of the same rhetoric and have been broadcasted on Arab TV stations across the globe. One such clip features a Muslim cleric, yielding a sword and shouting, "Allah permits it, even a stone will say: 'Oh Allah' a Jew is hiding behind my head. Come and cut his throat. We will cut his throat."

The only hate speech which seems to be spread is coming from the radical Muslims themselves – that is where the outrage should be focused. Typically, people who expose messages of hate are cheered for, but it appears Wilders will continue to be treated as a criminal. The director will likely face a strong backlash from this film, and he could meet the same chilling fate as other outspoken critics of Islam.

TO THE POINT

Teachers need to be tech savvy

Teachers have the first 10 minutes of their lectures to engage students, but after that we are texting, checking our e-mail, day dreaming or sleeping. Today's professors need to understand our multitasking minds. Reading out of the book or lecturing from the pulpit simply does not work anymore – really it might have never worked.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Mike Finnegan, instructor in leadership studies, said just like the alert that pops up to remind us when we have new e-mail, professors need to alert students to remind them of new information.

The use of technology is prevalent on campus, but a large majority of teachers are not taking advantage of attention-grabbing tools. K-State Online, another great tool to communicate with students, is never used to the fullest. Professors need to write and post blogs and set up chat times for debate.

One professor, Mike Wesch, is using YouTube.com to study ethnography. His entire class is exploring the interaction between humans and digital technology. This is an example of learning by doing. The students in this classroom will remember the purpose of the study before the purpose of the power-point slide.

Demonstrations, YouTube clips and classroom icebreakers are all ways to facilitate interaction in the classroom.

Did you seriously just figure this out three weeks before the concert? Good job, NCAA.

NCAA sucks.

How come everyone around me is either breaking up or getting engaged?

To the girl I walked in on that was in the bathroom at Porter's: Sorry, but lock the door next time.

What's with the wall in front of Moore Hall?

Great big gobs of greasy grimy gopher guts.

Hey, dude who wore the KU jersey in history class the other day: You're a giant tool.

You can't spell crisis without iSIS.

Hey, guy in my history class that always wears the KU hat: I see you, and I hate you.

Racquetball is a man's sport.

To the hot blond lifeguard: I'll be there at 8:30 Thursday.

I love the Cats. That's it.

To the girl in the red car who almost ran me over at 11 p.m. on Monday night: Watch where you're going.

I hate Haymaker fire drills.

The Fourum is not the personal ads. Get a real life and try Cupid.com.

Yes, this is the worst April Fools issue of the Collegian I've seen in the last five years. I've seen funnier stories in the regular paper.

It's so nice that the Collegian went to the time and effort to put together an April Fools issue instead of actually reporting news.

Dear sorority girls: Stop dragging your feet. I feel like I'm being chased by zombies.

I'm still trying to figure out what werewolves and zombies have to do with April Fools Day.

The good girls are hiding from all the jerks that screwed them over.

To the guy that set off the fire alarm in Haymaker Hall at 1:30 this morning: You're not funny and you're not original. Happy April Fools Day.

I am so sorry I almost caused you to crash on your bike.

Matt Combes had a very informational article yesterday. April fools.

Fourum: I'm pregnant and you're the father. April fools.

You know, thanks to Joe Vossen, I've decided to stop bringing my gun to school. Wow, what a genius.

K-State students are all happy and the girls are so great. Walking to classes, thank God I'm straight.

If you think KU is so amazing, just go there already.

The wall outside of Moore and Haymaker has prejudices all over it. They're going to destroy it on Thursday and it's supposed to be symbolic. Thanks.

Starting today, let's all be nice in the Fourum.

To the guy roller blading to class: My friend wants to be you.

I was just looking at the wall of hate, and honestly, who would have the nerve to call somebody a Tri-Delta?

Verbal flubs hurt presidential candidates' image, credibility

GRADY BOLDING

I enjoy seeing politicians mess up. Whether it's President Bush making another childish comment or Bill Clinton having another affair, it's priceless to see the elite crumble under their own weight. That is, unless the mistakes can be potentially harmful for America's future.

No, I'm not talking about the Bush Administration. I'm talking about none other than Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., and Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., two of today's presidential hopefuls. In the past two weeks, these notable presidential candidates have stepped on their own toes in the race to the White House due to 'misspoken words.' One flub after another doesn't bode well for the future.

Let's go in order just to be simple. First up: Hillary Clinton.

On March 25, Reuters reported Clinton spoke during a conference on March 17 in Washington, D.C. about her trip to war-torn Bosnia in 1996.

"I remember landing under sniper fire," she said. "There was supposed to be some kind of greeting ceremony at the airport, but instead we just ran with our heads down to get into the vehicles to get to our base."

Roughly a week later, news outlets showed footage shot of Hillary arriving at the Tuzla airport in Bosnia, clearly not under fire. In fact, the footage showed her greeting Bosnian civilians and being escorted by U.S. soldiers on a relatively quiet day. Her daughter Chelsea accompanied her.

Clinton responded to the media hype on KDKA radio in Pittsburgh, Pa., the same day: "I've written about it in my book and I've talked about it on many other occasions, and last week, uh, you know, for the first time in 12 or so years, I misspoke."

Nice excuse, except for one thing. Just a few weeks earlier on March 1, the New York Times followed Clinton to her campaign stop in Waco, Texas, where she said her greeting ceremony in Bosnia "had to be moved inside because of sniper fire."

Nice try, Clinton. Another strike against you in my book.

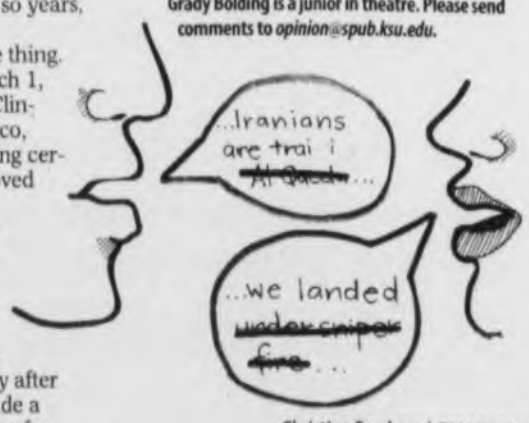
Then there's John McCain, the only remaining hopeful for the Republican ticket.

According to the Washington Post on March 18, just a day after Hillary "misspoke," McCain made a flub of his own during a news conference in Amman, Jordan.

"Well, it's common knowledge and has been reported in the media that al-Qaeda is going back into Iran and is receiving training and are coming back into Iraq from Iran," McCain said. "That's well-known, and it's unfortunate."

Shortly afterward, Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., stepped forward and whispered into McCain's ear. A second later, McCain said the following.

"I'm sorry; the Iranians are training the extremists, not al-Qaeda. Not al-Qaeda. I'm sorry."



Nice restatement, especially when it should be common knowledge that Iran is a Shiite nation that supports fellow Shiite extremists groups (Hezbollah) while al-Qaeda is a mostly Sunni terrorist organization funded by other mainly Sunni elements. Believe it or not, it did not end there. In a press release on johnmccain.com, McCain said the following in Arlington, Va., on March 19, the fifth anniversary of the beginning of the Iraq War and just two days after his first Iran-al-Qaeda flub:

"Al-Qaeda and Shi'a extremists – with support from external powers like Iran – are on the run but not defeated."

To put it straight: I can accept one flub or two here or there in politics. But when you make up an elaborate story or simply do not have your facts straight, as Clinton and McCain have demonstrated in such a short period of time, one has to question whether they're really worthy of that seat in the White House – a rather important responsibility, one might say. We've already seen what happens when candidates lie or are shortsighted in office, and affairs just do not go over well for the United States.

It appears America might be stuck with McCain or Clinton, respectively, as its national leader in the near future. We can only hope they won't make mistakes as bad as the few they've made in the past few weeks.

Weapons test brings together Fort Riley, K-State

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

FORT RILEY – Gunshots were heard for miles around Fort Riley as those holding leadership positions at K-State were invited by Maj. Gen. Robert Durbin to recognize all the years of service between K-State and Fort Riley with a day at the shooting range from 1:30 to 4 p.m. Tuesday.

A brief explanation of the weapons was given and participants were handed military safety gear like bulletproof vests and helmets.

Weapons that were used consisted of M4 rifles and M249 machine guns, to name a few.

The event brought together K-State leaders and Fort Riley soldiers and allowed them to enjoy some time together.

"We want to show that we appreciate all the work they do and sacrifices they make," said Student Body Vice President Lydia Peele, senior in mathematics education.

Greg Haug, Fort Riley project officer said the appreciation was mutual.

"This event brings together K-State leadership, and they can see what we do here everyday," Haug said.

This is the first time this activity has taken place between the two institutions.

Spending a day on the range together allowed both institutions and students to share ideas of future collaborations.

"I think there is definitely ways to gather together to help the region," said Student Body President Matt Wagner, senior in management information systems.

Fort Riley has an effect on K-State because many Fort Riley soldiers or dependents choose to pursue their education here.

"We're the two largest institutions in the region," said Art DeGroat, director of military affairs at K-State. "We live and work together."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Students should be permitted to conceal

Editor,

Once again, ignorance prevails. In Joe Vossen's article, "Guns should not be concealed on campus," he argues that concealed carry on campus would "give rise to more gun-related incidents than it would prevent." This opinion is stated as fact and wrongly so. He cites a drunken weekend event off-campus as reason to keep guns out of students' hands, but what about in the classroom where most students are sober and non-combative? Had students and teachers been carrying concealed weapons, the death tolls in Virginia and Illinois would have been far less. In the time it took for police to respond, unarmed students and faculty had already been brutally murdered. With no way to defend themselves, the victims were rendered helpless.

Keeping weapons out of the hands of the mentally ill is obviously easier said than done, but allowing others to protect themselves and those around them is a basic right. When the door swings open and a gun is pointed straight at you, will you thank your armed classmate who saves your life or will you shake your head at her in disgust because she believes in self-defense and had the courage to fight back?

Gun shop owner takes on second amendment rights

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pat Livingston, the owner and operator of Pat's Pawn & Gun Shop in Ogden, spent a few minutes answering questions about his interpretation of the second amendment Tuesday afternoon. Here's what he had to say:

How do you interpret the second amendment?

It's real simple. It says we have the right to keep and bear arms. That's it.

How effective are gun-control laws?

From what I see, we have a major problem, and we have a breakdown in our court system as far as mentally insane people and people who are demented. These people should be reported when they're sent in to a mental institution or for evaluation of any kind. Since that's not being done, these people are able to go to gun stores or anywhere they want to go.

Nobody is turning in information that they have a mental problem, and that's horrible. We have to address that somehow and make sure those people get on the system so when we call in a check that they are denied or delayed so they can't buy a gun.

Are there any gun-control laws you think are reasonable?

You have to have some laws and regulations on what you do. You've got to be reasonable and use a lot of common sense. We're a free society but we need to be honorable in our intentions too.

Would you sell fully automatic weapons if you had a class three license?

I don't think I would sell fully automatics myself. The main reason being is I guess you would be open to real risk to burglary. Somebody could steal those automatic weapons and the class of burglar that would break in would not be a gang member or a common thief – he's a serious guy that's coming for machine guns.

So you really have to have real good security and, of course, how you dispose of them and how you display them [are both factors] ... there's a lot of technicalities for handling class three machine guns.

How do you feel about concealed carry?

I think concealed carry works really good. If you look at any state that got concealed carry, the crime rates went down. For instance, my little brother lived in Canton, Texas, outside of Dallas and they had a lot of car [theft]. They would just put a gun to your head, pull you out of your car and take off. It dropped, I think, 40 percent in just the first six months they had concealed carry. Not that many people had concealed carry permits or guns, but it's the thought that you don't know who does.

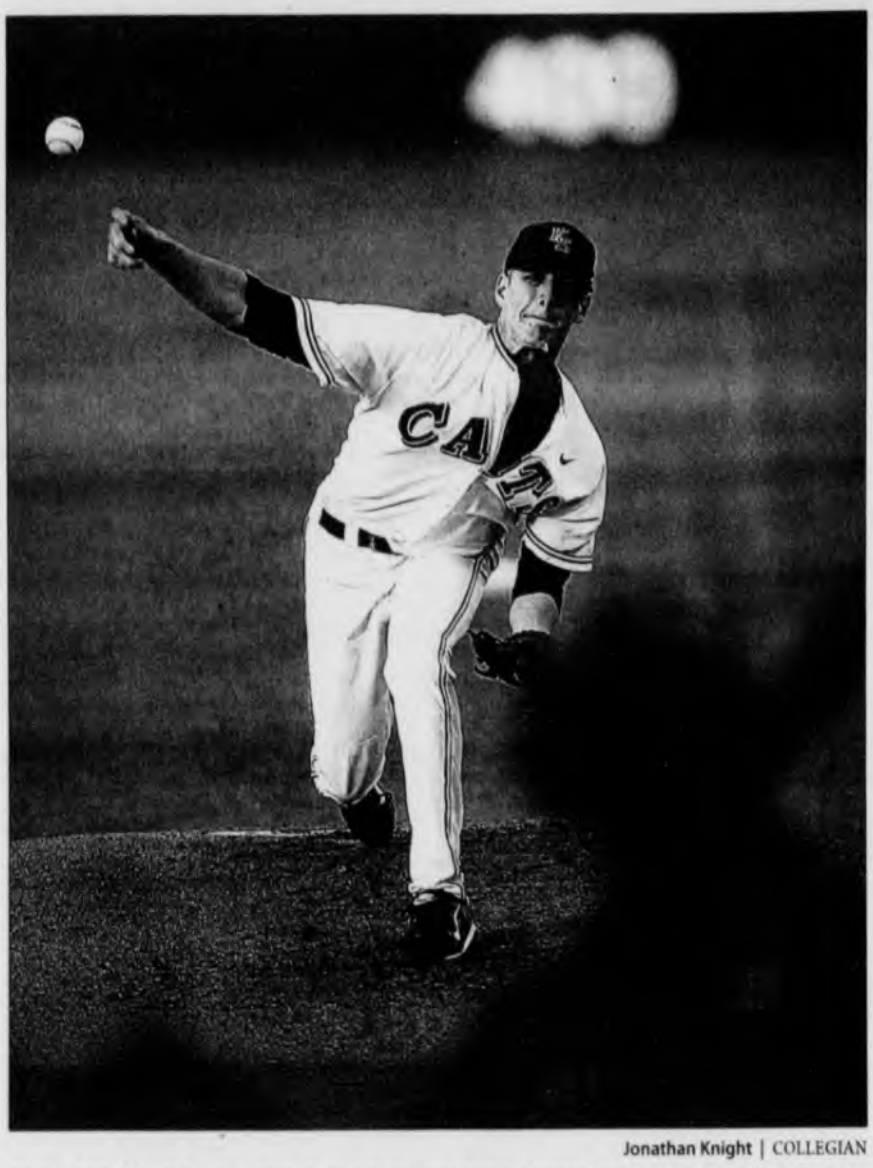
K-STATE 6, CENTRAL ARKANSAS 0

Shut out

Wildcats defeat Central Arkansas

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tuesday night's game between Central Arkansas and K-State marked the first meeting between the two school's baseball clubs, and it's one the visitors from Conway, Ark., might want to forget.



One run would have been all it took for the Wildcats to pick up their 14th victory of the season, but they had other plans. The Wildcats won the game 6-0, picking up 10 hits along the way.

Sophomore pitcher A.J. Morris gave up a lead-off single to Central Arkansas left fielder Kevin Rawls, but responded by retiring the next three Central Arkansas hitters he faced, striking out two. In K-State's half of the inning, Justin Bloxom doubled down the right-field line with two outs to drive in Adam Muenster.

Both teams were unable to produce an offense in the second inning, and the Bears followed suit in the top of the third. K-State, however, got all the run support it would need in the third.

A lead-off single by Carter Jurica and back to back bunt singles by Jordan Cruz and Muenster loaded the bases for Bloxom. The sophomore slugger took the second pitch he saw from UCA starter Reece Cross deep over the right field wall to give the Wildcats their second grand slam in five games and gave Bloxom his fifth home run of the season.

"I saw a fastball coming and was able to get a good swing on the ball, but those guys in front of me getting on deserve the credit," Bloxom said.

Pitcher A.J. Morris hurls a pitch during Tuesday's game. Morris threw six innings and only gave up four hits during a 6-0 K-State win. Morris is 3-1 on the year.

The blast put the lead for K-State at 5-0 after three innings of play. Both teams were unable to move any base runners across home plate until the bottom of the eighth inning.

During the inning, Jurica was caught in a rundown, which allowed Rob Vaughn to score from third base. The Bears were not so lucky, as Central Arkansas hit baseballs directly at Wildcat defenders all night. Shortstop Drew Biery was especially busy with nine defensive assists.

After giving up a lead-off hit in the first, Morris buckled down and retired the next 10 batters he faced, until giving up a single in the fourth. The right hander from Humble,

MEN'S GOLF

Team finishes in top-5 for 2nd meet in a row

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team finished the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic in fourth place Tuesday for its seventh top-5 finish of the 2007-08 season and its second in as many contests.

IDA

The Wildcats shot a three-round score of 28-over par 880, which left them 25 strokes behind tournament host and champion Wichita State. Other schools finishing ahead of K-State included Southern Methodist, which had a 12-over par 864, and Virginia Commonwealth, which shot a 20-over par 872.

With a score of eight-over par 576, the Wildcats were sitting alone in third place after the first two rounds of play, but a 20-over par 304 in the third round caused them to drop one spot in the overall rankings. Coach Tim Norris said although the team faltered in the final round, they never gave up.

"Today was a disappointment, but the guys remained competitive and stayed right in the hunt until the end," Norris said. "Everyone gave it their all on every single hole. We just hit the ball too many times. You can't really overanalyze it."

Norris said being paired with eventual tournament champion Wichita State didn't help the Wildcats down the stretch.

"They're a real good team, and they were playing on their own course," he said. "It was unrealistic to think we could come in and win two in a row. We were just overmatched."

The team was led by sophomores Joe Ida and Mitchell Gregson, who both finished the tournament in the top-10. Ida's 1-under par 212, including a tournament-low 65 in the first round, left him tied for third in the overall standings. It was his fourth top-5 finish of the season. Gregson's 3-over par 216 was good enough to finish in a ninth-place tie, which marks his fourth top-10 finish of his sophomore campaign. Norris said significant playing time last season has been a factor for the sophomore duo's consistent success this season.

"They both got to play all of last season, and they earned their spots in the lineup," he said. "Having experience is great, but you have to learn from it, or it will all be for not."

Norris said he believes Ida and Gregson still have the ability to take their game to the next level.

"They did a good job of reflecting on their freshman years, but I think they are capable of playing even better," he said. "I think they're

America's 'Past' time: Fans don't seem to care anymore about baseball

JOSE GARCIA

Monday marked the start of a new season for many Major League Baseball teams. There was a 13-game slate set for Monday's schedule, but it seems like no one cares anymore.

America's favorite past time, although rich with tradition, seems to be just that, a "past time." Among all the steroid allegations and labor and salary talk capturing headlines, it seems America has lost touch with the game that so many grew up loving.

The first game of MLB's 2008 season opened in Japan last month between the Oakland A's and the Boston Red Sox. The TV ratings for the game were extremely low, because it was only televised live in New England at 6 a.m., and very few fans watched the re-broadcast later that day.

MLB Commissioner Bud Selig said playing the game in Japan was an effort to expand the game to other cultures, but maybe he is realizing that United States fans think of it as just another game in the 162-game season.

The lack of interest in the game is evident with declining TV ratings and the inability to sell tickets to games. For instance, you can easily recognize a low-market team like the Kansas City Royals with give-away promotions just to get fans to come to the games.

The only time a baseball-related story is in the national news is when it involves Barry Bonds and how many times he has lied to a grand jury or jabbed a needle in his backside; or Jose Canseco selling out future Hall of Fame players of our era just so he can go on "60 Minutes" and tell Mike Wallace how tainted the game is.

It is apparent that today's fans do not share the interest their parents or grandparents keep. There has not been a World Series with more than 20 million viewers in the United States since Game Seven in 2001 when 23.5 million viewers tuned in to see the New York Yankees lose to the Arizona Diamondbacks.

Though the TV audience is a no-show, one bright spot for the MLB is home attendance, which has risen in the last couple years; so all is not lost for the league.

Going into the 2008 season, there are 124 players who have an annual salary of at least $8 million. It is easy to see why there is such a lack of interest in the game these days when these guys are getting paid this amount of money and half the league is suspected of cheating while playing.

Alex Rodriguez recently re-signed with the Yankees for a reported record $275 million over 10-plus years. This was huge news in the baseball world until earlier this year, when it was shadowed by accusations that he was introduced to steroids earlier in his career by Canseco.

Who wants to watch a game clouded by scandal and illegal drug use? Apparently not a declining American fan base.

Beasley named a Wooden All-American

Freshman forward Michael Beasley was selected to the 10-member 2008 John R. Wooden Award All-America team on Tuesday as well as one of five finalists for the prestigious John R. Wooden Player of the Year Award, which will be given out on April 11 at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Beasley was joined on the 10-member All-America squad by Texas' D.J. Augustin, Davidson's Stephen Curry, Memphis' Chris Douglas-Roberts, North Carolina's Tyler Hansbrough, Notre Dame's Luke Harangody, Tennessee's Chris Lofton, UCLA's Kevin Love, Memphis' Derrick Rose and Kansas' Brandon Rush.

Beasley was selected as one of five finalists for the organization's Player of the Year Award along with Augustin, Curry, Hansbrough and Love, and will join the group in Los Angeles for the Wooden Award Gala Friday, April 11 at the Los Angeles Downtown Sheraton Hotel.

The group was selected by a panel of more than 1,000 voters, comprised of sports media members and college basketball experts from around the nation, and took into account the player's performance during the regular season and postseason, his character and academic performance.

Beasley is the first K-State player to earn recognition from the Wooden Award, which was created in 1976 for the nation's best player at an institution of higher education who has proven to his university that he is making progress toward graduation and maintaining a cumulative 2.0 GPA. Previous winners include Larry Bird (1979), Michael Jordan (1984) and last year's receipent, Kevin Durant.

On Monday, Beasley joined Bob Boozer (1959) as the only players in K-State history to earn first team All-America honors from The Associated Press. He was one of two unanimous selections to the All-America team, joining Hansbrough. Overall, he is just the fifth player in school history to earn recognition to any of organization's three All-America teams.

Sutton resigns from Oklahoma State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STILLWATER, Okla. – Oklahoma State basketball coach Sean Sutton resigned under pressure Tuesday following a 17-16 season. Athletic director Mike Holder met with Sutton on Monday to discuss the state of the program. The move comes almost two weeks after Sutton completed his second season.

Sutton served as an assistant under his father Eddie Sutton before taking the top job. His status has been a subject of speculation for much of the second half of the season, beginning when the Cowboys lost six in a row, the program's longest skid in more than two decades.

"It has been a great experience and I have loved every minute of my time here at OSU," Sean Sutton said.

Sutton was less than halfway through a five-year contract worth $750,000 a year that he had agreed to when he was still an assistant on his father's staff. It called for him to be the head coach-designate, meaning he would take over when his father left.

The Cowboys, who started 1-6 in Big 12 Conference play, regrouped to win five straight games, including an upset of then-No. 4 Kansas, which has made the Final Four. But Oklahoma State lost its final two regular-season games to finish 7-9 in league play.

Oklahoma State beat Texas Tech and lost to Texas in the Big 12 tournament before losing 69-53 at Southern Illinois in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament. It was the third straight season in which the Cowboys lost a first-round NIT game.

Sutton was 39-29 in two full seasons, but his relationship with the program dates much further. After transferring from Kentucky, he was a guard on his father's Oklahoma State teams for two years before serving as an assistant for 13 years, including Final Four appearances in 1995 and 2004.

Diets high in antioxidants might help prevent some forms of cancer

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Dolores Takemoto, professor in biochemistry, works with a wheat sample on a microscope in a lab in Burt Hall. Takemoto has been exploring the use of antioxidants in foods as a cancer prevention technique.

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State biochemists are exploring the abilities of antioxidants in foods to prevent certain forms of cancer.

According to the U.S. National Cancer Institute Web site, antioxidants are substances that might protect cells from the damage caused by unstable molecules known as free radicals. These free radical damage might lead to cancer.

Antioxidants interact with and stabilize free radicals and might prevent the free radicals to cause damage.

Some examples of antioxidants are beta-carotene, vitamins C, E, and A.

"I think everyone should make sure they have enough of antioxidants in their diet. In general, dark colored vegetables – reds, greens – have a lot of antioxidants in them," said Dolores Takemoto, professor in biochemistry.

"Keeping a healthy diet can't prevent all kinds of cancer, because some cancers are genetically linked, some are due to environmental damage," she said. "One of the types of cancer, which can be prevented most by diet, is a colon cancer because as you eat things, it goes through the digestive tract and many things are absorbed very well into the colon."

One of the courses professor Takemoto teaches is Biochemistry in Society, in which students keep track of their diet.

"Students, in general, have a terrible diet," she said. "Some of the things they are eating are just horrible, like five skittles and a Coke for lunch or skipping breakfast entirely. One guy in class said he had 12 beers for dinner."

Takemoto's research is being funded by the Terry C. Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research, which offers a variety of programs for K-State faculty affiliates, graduate and undergraduate students who contribute greatly to the world of cancer studies.

"They learned from this class how bad their diets were," Takemoto said. "When you are young, you don't feel it as much, but you pay for it later because the effects of bad lifestyle are accumulating in the body. You can have a heart attack muck quicker if you are overweight or if you are eating a lot of fat."

K-State researches found that wheat with a high-level of antioxidants might be a powerful tool in the fight against cancer and other diseases like diabetes and heart disease.

Takemoto and her colleagues are trying to create modified wheat strains with high levels of cancer-fighting chemicals. Their research shows that eating whole grain products and wheat germ is critical for the absorption of antioxidants.

"You grow a cell of cancer in an incubator," she said. "Then you take different types of wheat – we took 300 – from all over the world. You put them on the cells and see which one kills cancer cells better. We selected from those probably 10 or 20 that are very good at that and then began to look at the components."

The research group identified a number of phytochemicals contained in wheat samples that have cancer-killing proprieties in culture based on their orthophenolic acid content.

Future studies will be conducted to determine which specific components are critical to produce this protective effect and what the minimal dietary concentration of wheat sample is that will decrease tumor formation. A long-term aim is to breed high antioxidant wheat varieties and demonstrate their health benefits in humans.

Takemoto's colleague, professor Ron Madl, director of bioprocessing and industrial value, said cancer prevention is too strong of a phrase for wheat qualities.

"Wheat can suppress cancer if it consumed as a whole grain product," Madl said. "Research is continuing in this area, and the issue that we are confronting is that not all wheats are high in antioxidants. We are trying to understand the mechanism that controls the level of antioxidants in wheat varieties," he said.

Marketing Department increases awareness of wallet phone usage

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In an typical college student's bag, there are credit and debit cards, cash, student ID cards, a driver's license and phones. With all of the books and supplies an average student carries to class, an organized and light school bag is usually hard to come by. To combat the problem, the use of wallet phones is increasing in Japan and beginning to make its mark in the United States.

According to information on an Axio Survey for K-State Marketing, more than 10 million phones have been shipped to the United States, and that number will continue to increase. Esther Swilley, assistant professor in marketing, has decided to conduct research to analyze the convenience of wallet phones and to measure the effect they might have on the American culture.

Swilley said the research was first conducted last spring, and this is the second time the department has conducted this research.

"It was conducted in order to understand if the technology is found to be useful, easy to use and accepted by others," she said.

According to a Euro technology-Japan Report on wallet phones, these new cell phones are equipped to include bank cards, credit cards, house keys, company access control IDs, electronic cash, train tickets and several other functions. These phones are able to replace wallets through a multi-application smart card on which each application corresponds to a particular traditional function.

Swilley has an active role in the department's research and is one of several faculty members who are polling students. Swilley has used focus groups in the past, but has found surveys to be more convenient and beneficial.

"Surveys are useful because it is easier to ask several people many questions at one time," she said. "And, because I am using students, they are used to surveys."

Swilley has given her students the opportunity to receive two extra credit points for every survey they turn in completed by a person not affiliated with K-State. After these surveys have been completed and turned in, she will be able to complete and analyze her research.

"The response has been good," she said. "Since it is up until April 4th, I won't know until an analysis is done. I will use the research to conduct an analysis to see if my research question is answered, then I will write up the findings and send the paper to a marketing journal for publication."

New dental clinic to serve uninsured, poor

Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A dental clinic that will serve low-income and uninsured Manhattan residents is in its early planning stages.

The clinic is a mutual effort between the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department and Konza Praire Community Clinic.

Michael Dolan, chief operations officer for the Konza Clinic, said a meeting took place before spring break at the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department to begin making plans for the clinic.

"We're looking at space, securing funding for remolding and dental equipment," he said.

There are many aspects to be considered before the clinic can be established, Dolan said.

"We need to know how many dental personnel we'll need and hours of operation," he said.

The dental clinic would be located in the RCHD and would serve as a branch of the Konza Clinic, which is located in Junction City, Dolan said.

"The clinic will provide service for families with kids who are on Medicaid or uninsured and just can't afford it," he said.

Dolan said a lot of dental offices in Manhattan won't take Medicaid. However, the proposed clinic is not intended to be competition for other private practices.

"Our plan is to work with other dentists in the area, not to be another business and take over," he said.

Susanne Kufahl, assistant administrator of RCHD, said the lack of dental care for uninsured individuals has been a concern for years.

"We deal with it the best we can," she said.

The RCHD has developed relationships with local dentists to help assist the needs of those without insurance. However, the need is bigger than individual practices can handle, she said.

Dolan said the clinic is in its early planning stages, so anything could change. Funding for the clinic would be a challenge that could cause structural changes. The organizations are looking to federal, local and state governments for help.

Five foundations are helping with the Konza and RCHD grants, including the United Methodist Health Ministry Fund, Sunflower Foundation, REACH Health Care Foundation, Delta Dental of Kansas Foundation, and Walter S. and Evan C. Jones Testamentary Trust, Bank of America, Trustee.

The next step is to contact dentists to get their inputs and thoughts, since the dental clinic would be a collaboration of dentists, Kufahl said.

"We want anyone with experience," she said.

Texas, finished the night throwing six shutout innings, giving up four hits and striking out four. Morris moves to 3-1 on the season.

"I just wanted to get ahead early and really set the tone tonight," Morris said. "I was able to hit spots with my pitches and when you have defense behind you like that, it helps."

Pitcher Chase Bayuk made his second relief appearance for K-State pitching three more innings to combine with Morris for the shutout. Bayuk also picked up the first save of his career after giving up one hit and one walk while he struck out four.

"Chase had some real good stuff tonight," coach Brad Hill said. "We believe in him."

Muenster extended his hitting streak to 11 games picking up a pair of singles in his performance to go along with a stolen base. He wasn't the only Wildcat swiping bases; five other Wildcats added a stolen base each. K-State has been one of the nation's best this season in the stolen base category, and Tuesday night's tally of six will help its conference-leading and NCAA top-ten ranking with 64 so far this season.

Winners of seven of their last eight games, Hill said the Wildcats are finally beginning to play with some of the confidence and consistency they struggled with early in the season.

"Our confidence is really finally coming along," he said. "We've won seven of eight [during the home stand], and I think a lot of that comes from being more confident and finally getting some consistent swings."

K-State takes on Central Arkansas again today at 3 p.m. at Tointon Family Stadium before heading south for a Big 12 series versus Texas A&M this weekend.

better," he said. "I think their best golf is still ahead of them."

Junior Robert Streb finished tied for 25th with a 9-over par 222, including an even-par 71 in the second round. Senior Kyle Yonke, coming off of his strongest performance of the season at the Ron Moore Invitational, carded an 18-over par 231, which left him in a tie for 64th.

Redshirt freshman Ross Geubelle finished in 83rd with a 23-over par 236. Freshmen Kyle Smell and Daniel Wood, competing as individuals for the Wildcats, both tied for 46th. They shot identical scores of 15-over par 228.

The Wildcats will be back in action next week at the Missouri Tiger Intercollegiate on April 7-8 in Columbia, Mo. Norris said he believes his team can use this tournament as a stepping stone for its next competition.

"Teams must be able to keep their momentum to get to the next level," he said. "Hopefully, this performance will make the guys more motivated to play well in Missouri."

STRESS | Pressure, competitive nature could cause stress increase can stress out about tests, relationships, time management and family.

"In the fiscal year '06/07, we had 20,483 contacts. That number includes therapy sessions, outreach talks, consultation with faculty and staff, training, classroom contacts, etc.," Pearson said. "Nintey-two percent of clients report mood difficulties, 69 percent indicate relationship concerns, 40 percent report career uncertainties, 31 percent learning difficulties, 25 percent food concerns and nearly 20 percent of students present substance abuse concerns."

Pearson said some people are more prone to worry, while others do not worry at all. For students who worry, stress can build up fast. Also, for students who are not aware of stress in their lives, stress can creep in and get to a critical point.

Suicide is the second leading cause of death for college students, Pearson said. K-State has received a grant to work with suicide prevention for college students.

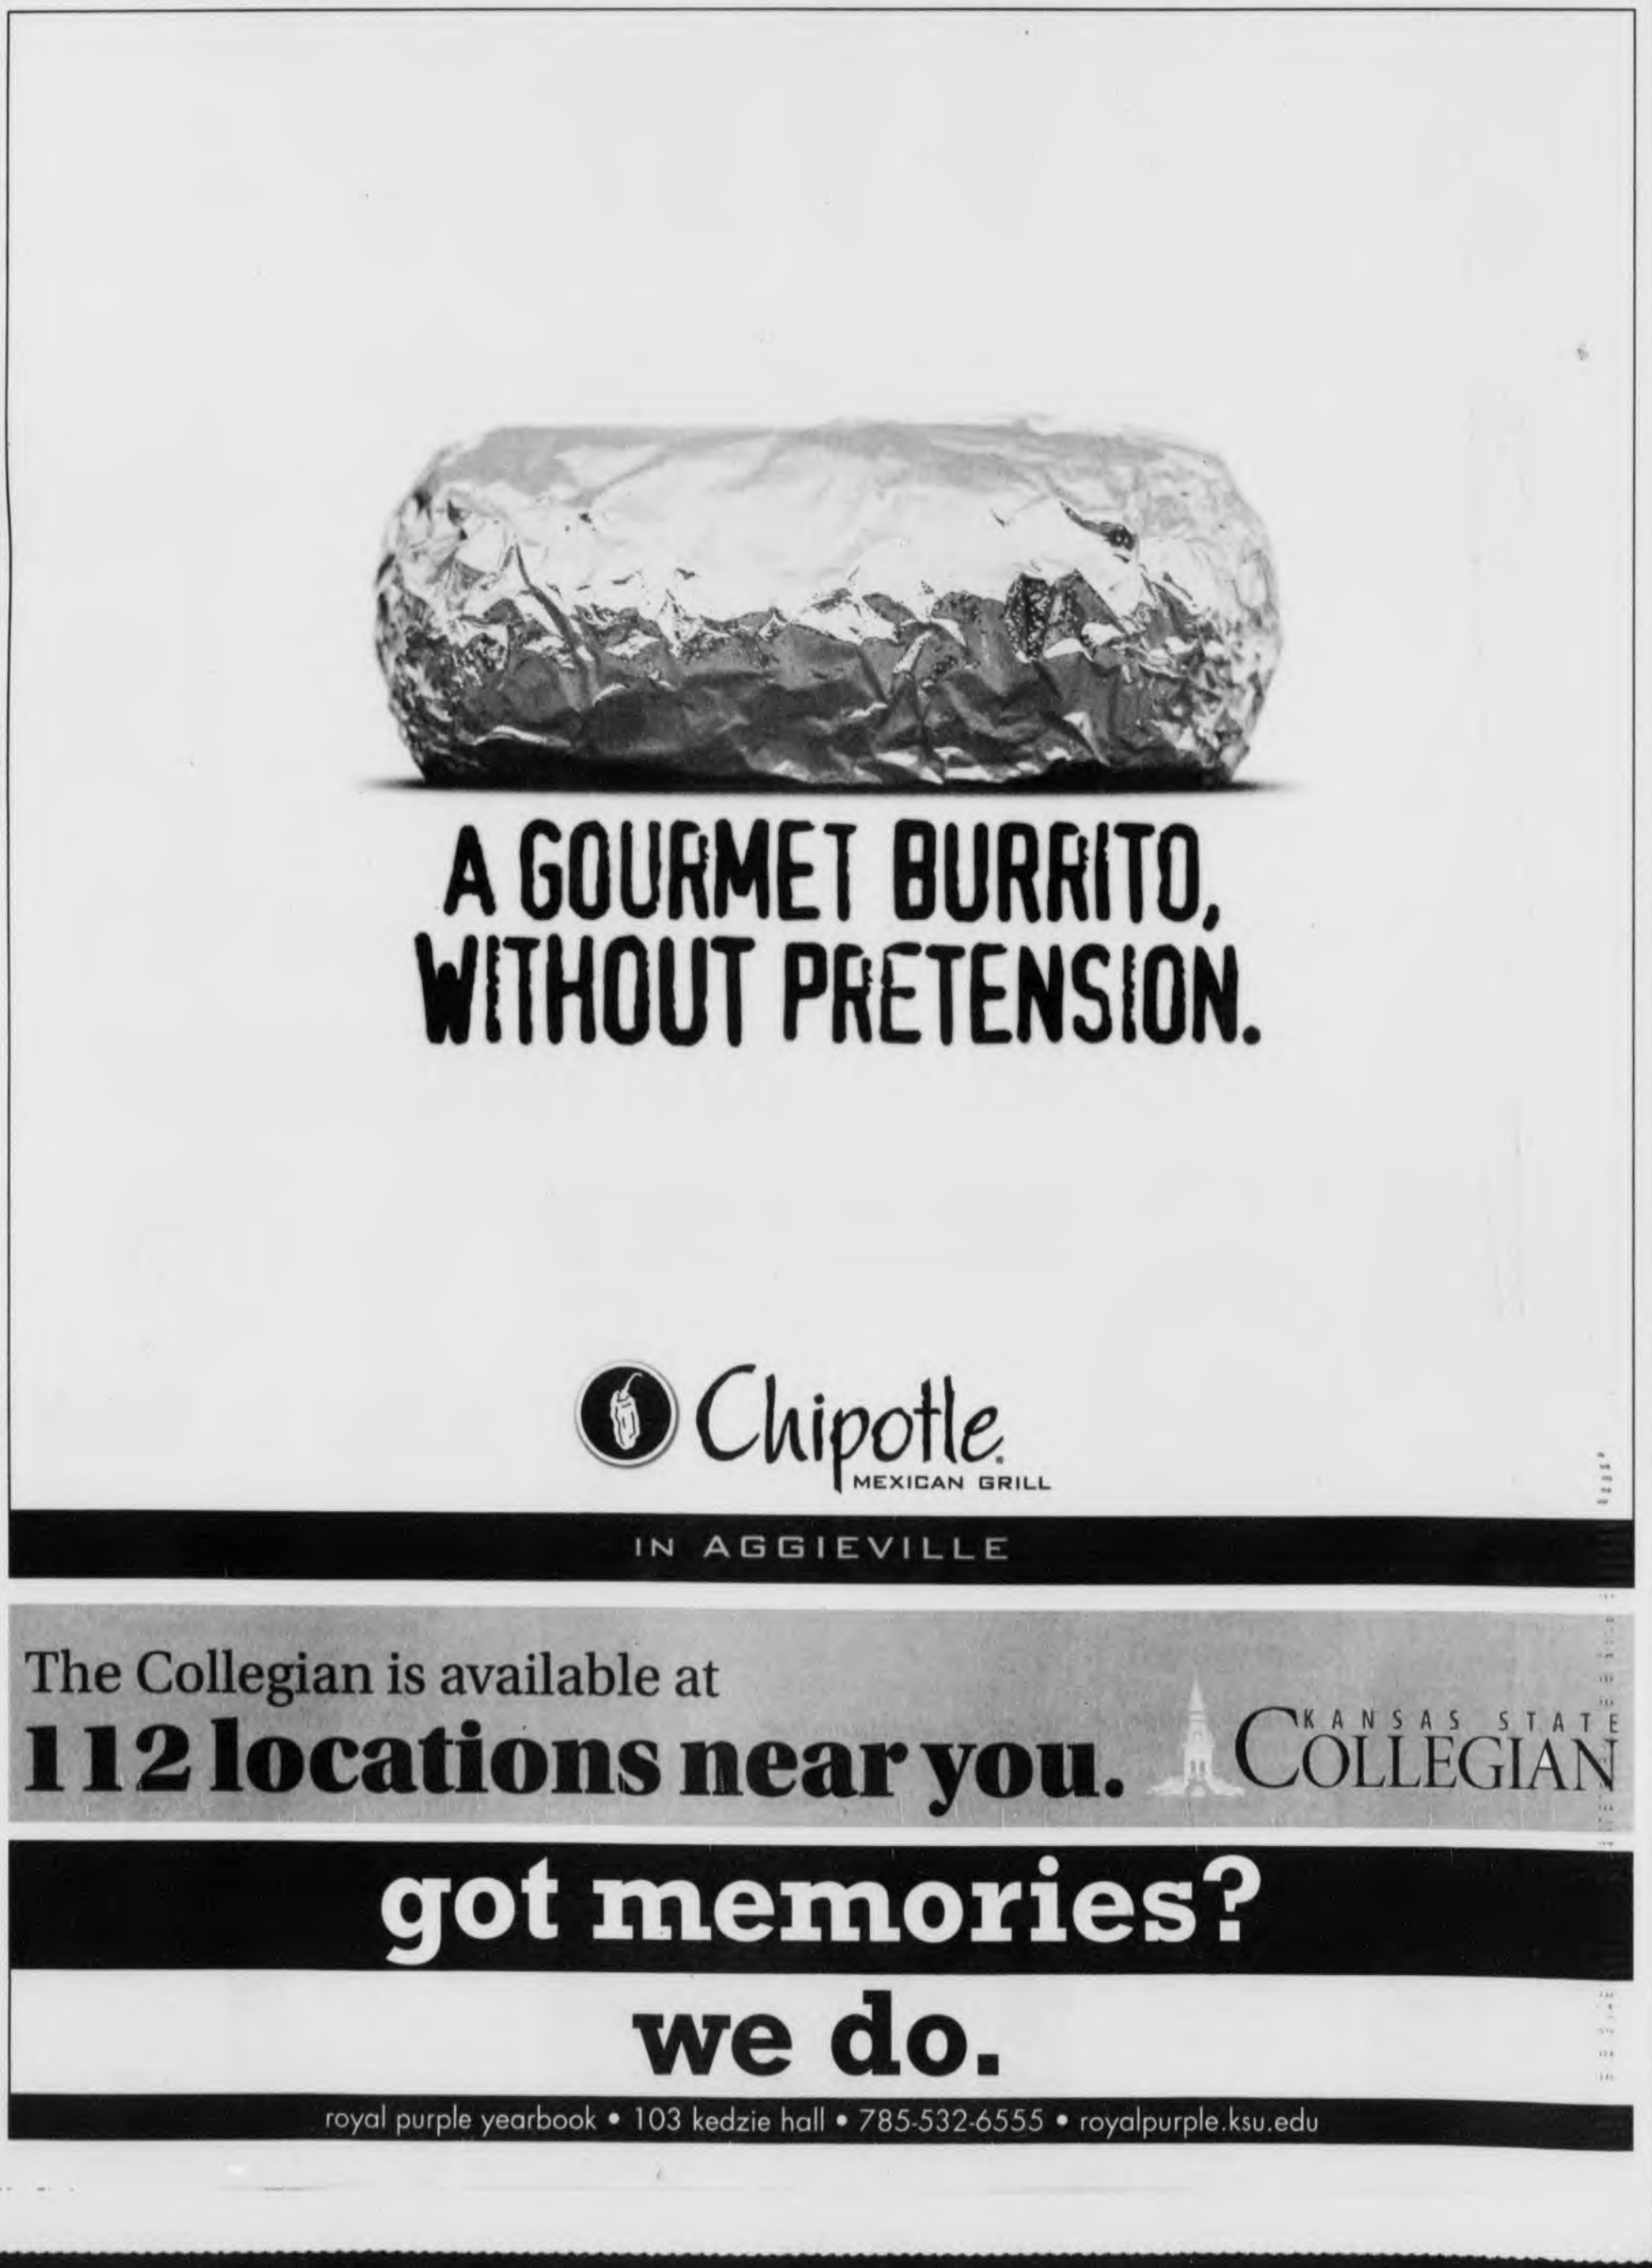
"I think that chronic stress leads to stress and anxiety, which can lead [to] depression," Pearson said.

Suicide can be caused by many factors, and while stress can be a reason, there are usually more underlying issues, such as depression, that cause suicide, she said.

Deanna Coughlin, sophomore in family studies and human services, said she feels a lot of pressure to succeed.

"Especially in our culture, people equate success with making money, and many people feel that if you don't make money, you won't be happy and successful," Coughlin said.

She said she deals with stress by taking breaks to be with friends and listening to music.



Getting enough sleep also helps her deal with stress so she can handle what the next day brings without being exhausted.

"I believe that if you don't handle your stress, you can become very overwhelmed," Coughlin said. " I think it's important to learn how to balance everything in your life so that school or work doesn't overwhelm you too much."

She said she thinks college students are stressed more than ever because college is more competitive than it used to be.

"Sometimes it's hard for college students to not look at the big picture and get stressed because it takes a lot of money and time to get where they want to be," Coughlin said.

Spring weather allows students to participate in several activities like biking, jogging and Utlimate Frisbee. Although the weather has been cooler than normal for spring, the temperatures should warm in the coming days.

Warmer weather offers outdoor activity alternatives

Though the weather has warmed only slightly, spring has officially started.

The longer days provide students with all sorts of outdoor activities that are intolerable in frigid winter weather. Students can swim, bike, run and walk in the temperate outdoor air, but what can they do on campus?

Some options include a make-shift disc golf course, sidewalks for walking and running, and fields for playing pick-up sports games.

K-State has a Kansas Disc Golf Association-recognized course that runs through campus. The 18-hole course is well-marked and utilized by many students on a daily basis. Lucas McGarity, senior in secondary education, has been playing disc golf for about six years and said he enjoys playing disc golf when the weather gets warmer.

"We usually play when it's warm in the summer and spring," McGarity said. "Sometimes [we] go out die-hard in the winter but usually when it's warm."

McGarity said one of his favorite parts of playing disc golf is out driving the friends he's playing with.

"You know seeing how far you can throw it," McGarity said. "Then you can taunt your friends if they can't quite throw it that far."

McGarity said he usually plays with his roommates and friends, but he also enjoys meeting people he knows on the course.

"Sometimes we run into people on the course and join their group. It's a real friendly atmosphere," McGarity said.

Another activity winter weather makes harder is walking with friends. Walking allows friends to spend time together and get their daily exercise in a different environment. Lori Elliott, senior in secondary education, enjoys walking for all of these reasons. Elliott also said she enjoys being able to get her exercise somewhere other than the Peters Recreation Complex.

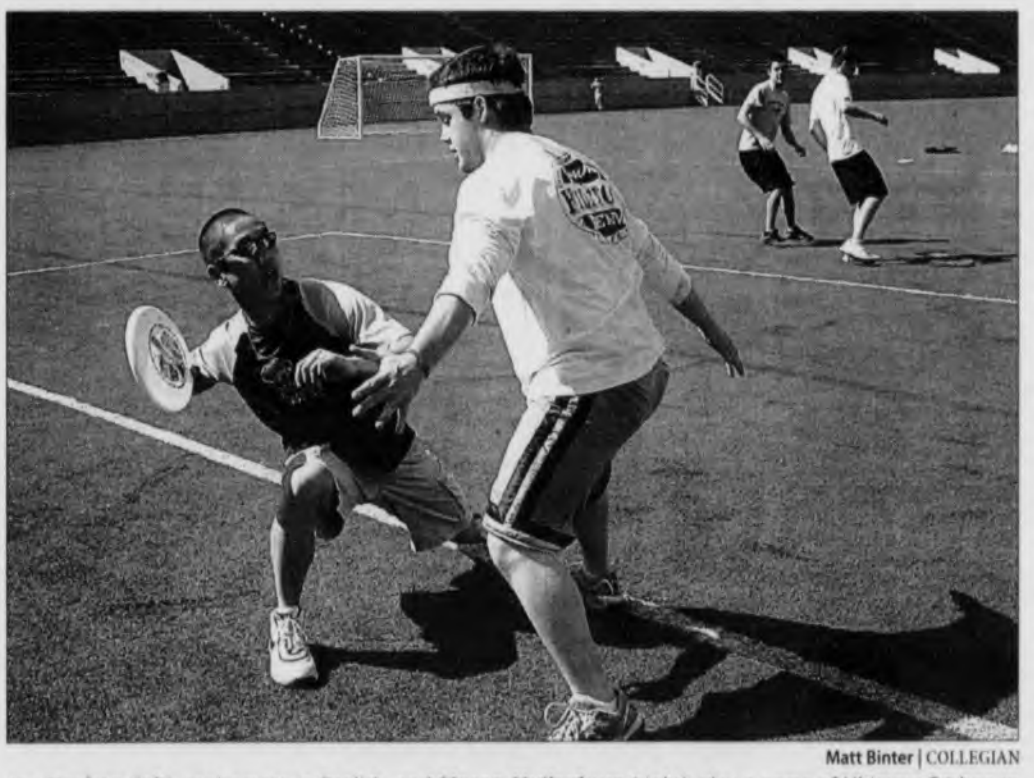
"It's nice to have a place to go, other than the Rec, to get physical activity," Elliott said. "It's not as boring."

When she goes on walks, she said she prefers to start walking with no place in particular to go, rather than picking a destination.

"[We] just kind of walk around campus to see different parts," Elliott said.

Elliott also said she likes to keep the number of fellow walkers low so they can all stay on the path.

When time allows and she can spend time with her boyfriend, they enjoy going on bike rides and playing tennis.



Swimming is another activity that is made difficult when the temperature drops below 50 degrees.

Jenny Cole, junior in elementary education, said she has loved swimming for as long as she can remember. Cole took swimming lessons as a child and now teaches them in the summer. As a lifeguard, Cole spends most of her day in or around the pool.

"I love being out in the sun," Cole said.

Cole said she loves going to the pool because it is relaxing, but does not go only to work out. She also said she swims laps sometimes on her breaks, but she spends most of her time in the water playing games.

"Sometimes we hit a volleyball around," Cole said. "I like to play underwater games where you have to hold your breath."

KING'S KITCHEN

Cheesesteak, egg sandwich a great brunch item

BRETT KING

Typically around noon on Saturday or Sunday, I start to get a little craving for a good meal. The problem I usually have is by the time I wake up, breakfast time is past, but my body tells me it is not quite time for lunch either.

During the week, it is usually pretty simple to get lunch. Either I will bring leftovers from the night before or eat at one of the wonderful restaurants we have in this city. On the weekends, the last thing I want to do is go out and spend more money after having a substantial bill in Aggieville the night before.

This week, I decided to take a look back at the recipes I have submitted and realized I have yet to have a sandwich that can incorporate breakfast and lunch together. I brought two of my favorites together – eggs and Philly cheesesteak.

BREAKFAST PHILLY CHEESESTEAKS

INGREDIENTS:

-1/2 yellow onion, diced thin
-2 tablespoons olive oil, divided
-Salt and pepper to taste
-1/2 green pepper, seeded and cut into quarter inch pieces
- 2 ounces cremini mushrooms, sliced thin
- 1/4 pound chuck eye steak, sliced paper thin
- 1 egg
- 1 hoagie roll, cut lengthwise and warmed
- Small handful of mozzarella cheese

DIRECTIONS:

This can be cooked one of two ways — a flattop griddle is preferred, but a large skillet can also be used. Over medium heat, combine onions, one tablespoon of olive oil, salt and pepper to the griddle; and cook. Stir occasionally for five minutes or until onions are softened. Add green peppers to the mix and cook for an additional five to 10 minutes.

In a smaller skillet or another section of the flattop, while the green peppers are heating with the onions, combine mushrooms with a splash of oil, salt and pepper. Let the combination heat for five minutes before adding the onions and green peppers.

In another skillet or different section of the flattop, cook meat for about one to two minutes on each side. Because meat is sliced thin, it will cook quickly. Once beef is done, chop into smaller bits until shredded. Even though the recipe calls for steak, chicken breast chunks can be used as well, but it may take longer to cook.

Crack egg and scramble with meat. Combine all ingredients together and place on a hoagie roll. Top mixture with a handful of mozzarella cheese to enhance the flavor.

Renowned bassist to perform

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the world's premier double bassists will perform in the next installment of the McCain Performance Series.

DaXun Zhang, an accomplished musician, will perform alongside a piano when he comes to campus.

"It is unusual to have an upright bassist be able to do that kind of performance," said Thom Jackson, assistant director of McCain.

Zhang has been studying and performing the double bass since he was a child, according to a press release from the theater department. He comes from a family of bassists and began playing at the age of nine. He began his formal education on the instrument when he was 11 years old.

Zhang plays with Yo Yo Ma's "Silk Road Project," is a solo performer with the University of Northern Colorado Symphony and gives regular recitals across the nation, including Indiana University where he received his bachelor of music degree.

Zhang's performance will be at 7:30 p.m. Friday in All Faiths Chapel. The performance will also feature Tomoko Kashiwagi, a pianist who performs with Zhang in Ma's quartet.

NBAF | Administrators say K-State is best site for federal bio-defense lab built or its location. The Department of Homeland Security mailed informational cards to Manhattan residents that stated they could obtain a copy of the draft of the Environmental Impact Statement upon its completion, Marino said.

The Kansas legislature has passed a bill that authorizes the transfer of all or part of a tract of land located in township 10 south, range eight east of the sixth Principal Meridian in Riley County. The total acreage is less than 45 acres when the land containing the BRI is subtracted, according to www.dhs.gov.

The EIS scoping period took place from July 31-Sept. 28, 2007. The Department of Homeland Security conducted eight public meetings near the proposed NBAF sites and in one regional location. On Aug. 28, 2007, the Department of Homeland Security had its Manhattan scoping meeting at Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Results of this process can be found at http://www.dhs.gov/xlibrary/assets/nbaf_scoping_report_final_feb2008.pdf.

COMMUNITY INPUT

Upon the completion of the EIS draft in April or May, the DHS will have a 60-day comment period and associated public meeting for comments that will be given equal consideration in the final statement.

Trewyn said at the Aug. 28, 2007, K-State meeting, about 250 people were in attendance. Fifty-two people provided comment officially on the record about NBAF and Manhattan as a proposed site – 48 people spoke in support, two people spoke against Manhattan as a proposed site and two people spoke neutrally on the issue, Trewyn said.

As a person who has moved around for most of her life, Sylvia Beeman said she loves Manhattan and considers it her favorite place of those communities she has lived in. Beeman, a local artist and Manhattan resident since 1979, opposes Manhattan and K-State as a proposed NBAF location.

"I really don't think it should be anywhere on the mainland," Beeman said. "It's all about economics – you put the money to do the research where the diseases are already endemic; you don't bring it into places.

"I don't want anything bad to happen to this community; I don't want to trash my community. I really love it."

Beeman attended a public meeting in September 2007 at McCain Auditorium that addressed NBAF issues; however, she said half of those in attendance were university administrators and veterinarians who support NBAF at K-State. Because of her opposition, Beeman said she has passed a petition around Manhattan and made telephone calls about NBAF.

As a retired person who worked part-time at a virology lab at K-State when she first moved to Manhattan, Beeman said she researched NBAF for several weeks before she mailed her editorial, "There are many reasons to fight the NBAF," to the Manhattan Mercury in fall 2007.

"I'm only one person," Beeman said. "There's only so much I can do; there are so many questions."

During K-State's All-University Open House on April 19, additional NBAF information will be provided at the BRI.

WASHINGTON MEETING

In late February, members of the Kansas delegation, Sebelius, Lt. Gov. Mark Parkinson and majority and minority leaders from the Kansas House and Senate traveled to Washington, D.C., and met with members from the U.S. House and Senate Appropriations committees.

Trewyn and Dr. Jerry Jaax, K-State associate vice president for research compliance and university veterinarian, also traveled to Washington and spoke about the national need for NBAF and Manhattan as the best site for the facility.

Trewyn and Jaax said K-State's discussion for a facility like NBAF predates Sept. 11 in a document that Trewyn calls "the purple book." The 1999 K-State book, "Homeland Defense Food Safety, Security, and Emergency Preparedness Program," identifies the university's position to play a lead role with food crop, food animal and food safety in homeland defense.

In 1999, 130 K-State faculty members were identified who worked on protecting food crops, animals and the food supply. This research, along with K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute, makes Manhattan an optimum site for NBAF, Trewyn and Jaax said.

In his examination of local newspaper reports and other media outlets, Jaax said Manhattan's public support is "as strong as any" of the proposed NBAF sites.

"We've been talking about this for a long time," Jaax said. "I think that the community can see that the NBAF business is simply not a knee-jerk response to a new opportunity. This is something that's been a commitment of the university for a long time, and it's not just, 'Well, there's a new pile of money – let's give it a shot.'"

YouTube comedian dances, gives leadership advice

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An inspirational comedian compared changing dance trends to life and entertained a crowd full of fans Wednesday night at the K-State Student Union.

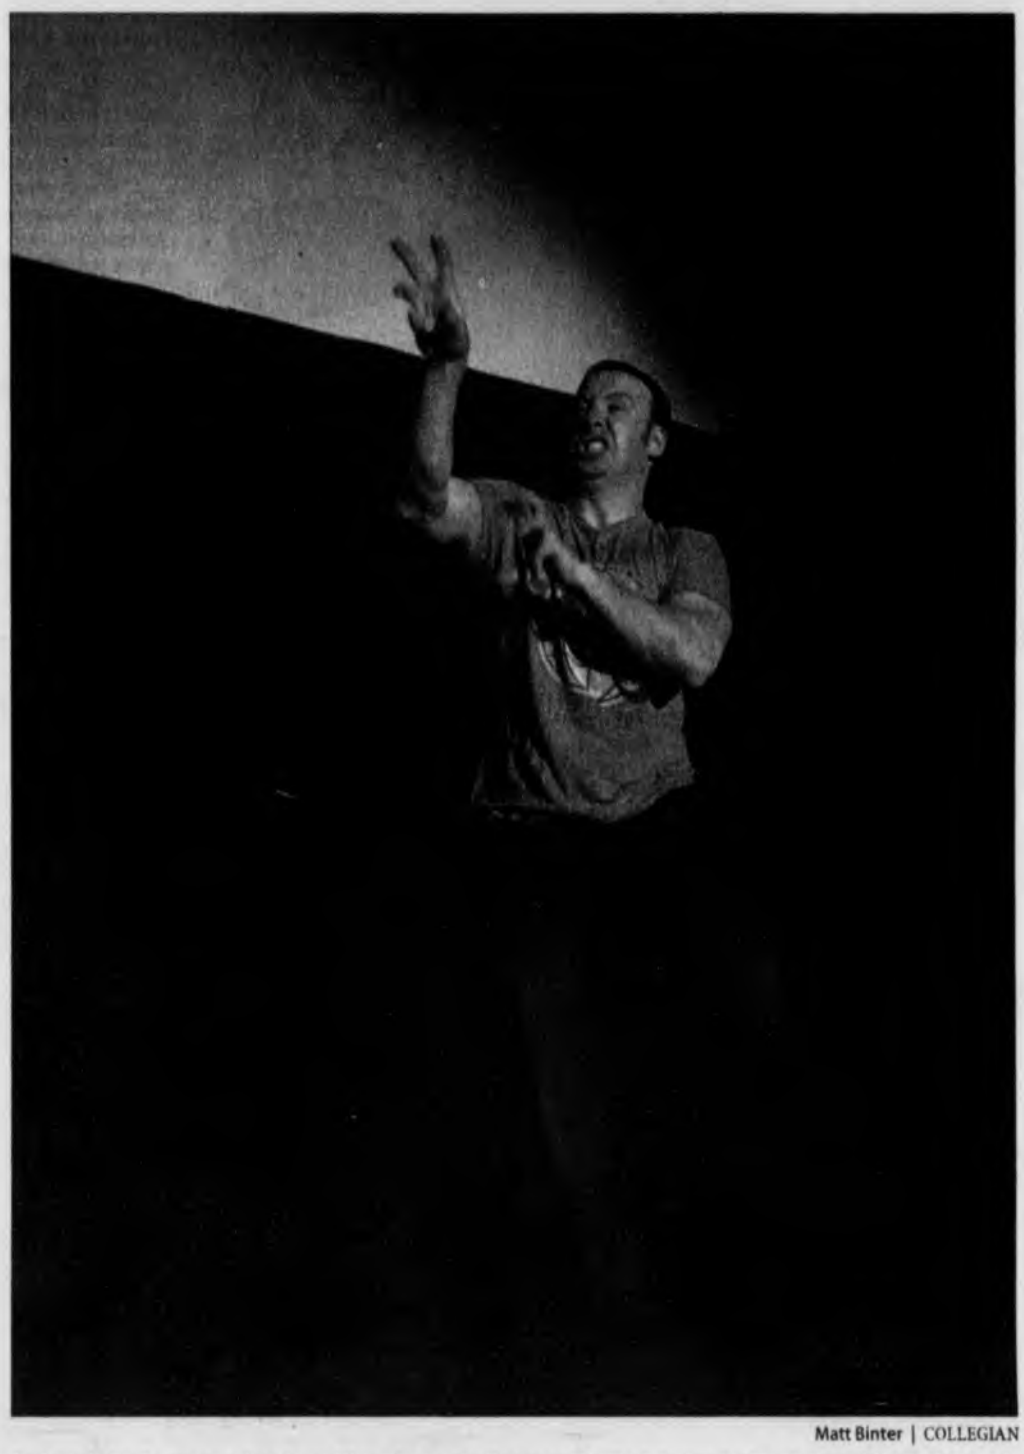
Judson Laipply presented his popular program "Inspirational Comedy" along with his famous six-minute dancing parody "The Evolution of Dance," which has had millions of views on YouTube.com. For the K-State performance, he added Shakira and Soulja Boy songs to his performance.

Laipply said he attempts to make peoples' lives better and easier. He explained that "life is change" and quality of it depends on what choices a person makes on a daily basis and how people treat their family, friends and other people in general.

"Things are constantly changing all the time, and we have a power of choice, which gives us control on our lives," Laipply said. "We create the change in our lives through the choices we make."

Some other topics he spoke about were the problem of drinking among college students, family relationships, overreaction to mundane issues, Internet and especially Facebook addiction.

Laipply said his aim is not to teach or to tell morals, but rather make people laugh and reflect on their life.



Laipply graduated from Bluffton University with a bachelor's degree and received his master's degree from Bowling Green State University before starting his career as a speaker.

Representatives from campus organizations promoted their groups before the show, telling students about leadership and involvement opportunities at K-State.

"Laipply is a very inspirational speaker. We thought that K-State would love him, so we decided to bring him here," said Annisa Shockey, senior in life sciences and president of Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators. "He is also a very friendly and approachable person."

The event's finale was the Anthropology teacher uses videos to educate

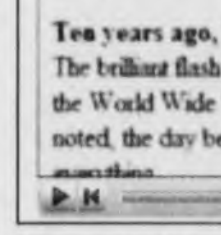
By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

YouTube.com is one of the fastest-growing video-sharing Web sites in the world, and the popular site is now being used in the classroom.

WESCH

In particular, K-State assistant professor of anthropology Michael Wesch collaborated with students to create a video for YouTube that has been viewed more than 1.5 million times.

Wesch said it began as a simple discussion about the future of students and ways to improve teaching and learning in the classroom.



"All I did to start it off was say, 'Let's reflect on teaching and learning today and how it can be better,'" he said. "That's when they started generating ideas – that's how it all got started."

Wesch's spring 2007 Intro to Cultural Anthropology class decided to create another video titled, "A Vision of Students Today." The video, which is up for a YouTube Most Inspirational Video of 2007, features students in Wesch's class describing their experience as a new generation of college students with different examples of today's struggles.

Some of these challenges included high student expenses, large class sizes, busy schedules and lack of sleep.

These issues were addressed in "A Vision of Students Today," which is just one of several videos that have been posted on YouTube by Wesch's classes.

Wesch's Digital Ethnography class created videos as student projects. The course is based around the exploration of effects on culture – specifically digital media – and last year, the students in Wesch's class did semester-long research projects and created videos to highlight their results.

Wesch said students from the class were able to post them on YouTube, and some even received awards for their work.

Adam Bohannon, senior in anthropology, was a student in Wesch's Digital Ethnography class. In the class, Bohannon decided to do research on self identity and media ecology.

"I was interested in how interacting on the Internet affects how we see ourselves as people," he said.

MHS teacher denied request after alleged sex scandal

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden Board of Education decided to terminate the contract of a high school teacher accused of having unlawful sexual relations with a 17-year-old male student in a closed session Wednesday evening.

The closed session preceded the regular board meeting held at the Robinson Education Center.

Katherine Harder, who was a language arts teacher at Manhattan High School, was formally charged with unlawful sexual relations with a student last week.

The two were found in a parked car in the Spillway Marina Park area of Tuttle Creek Dam by a Pottawatomie County Sheriff's deputy March 30.

Harder resigned March 31, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal.

She has rescinded her resignation since and was placed back on suspension, according to The Manhattan Mercury.

At its regular meeting, the board announced its intent to terminate Harder's contract. Harder has the right to request a hearing before the board by April 11.

"Personnel is always a difficult issue, and I think the board handled it as appropriate," said board president Beth Tatarko.

The board approved adoption of new language arts textbooks for grades K-12.

Bids were approved for electrical improvements for Amanda Arnold Elementary School, to be completed by the start of school year 2008-09. Improvements will include replacing all lighting, intercom system and

Senators-elect to take seats tonight; outgoing senators to be honored

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who won Student Senate elections will be sworn in tonight at the weekly Student Governing Association meeting.

The annual event is called turnover, and it lasts significantly longer than typical SGA meetings. The normal meeting will start at 5:30 p.m. in the Big 12 Room in the K-State Student Union.

Student Senate Chair Nick Piper, senior in finance, said the meeting will be over at about 9 p.m., which is when turnover will start.

Senators will vote on an increase in student-health privilege fees to compensate for the rise in minimum wage. If passed, the bill will add $6,000 to the planned increase of more than $200,000.

A resolution in support of free exchange of ideas on campus is also in final action. The legislation states that faculty members must be able to research and publish their findings without outside interference to accomplish free exchange of ideas:

– Faculty members must be able to teach all information and analysis relevant to their course and engage students in all their observations and questions.

– Students should be able to take courses in a wide variety of subjects, including topics often considered controversial.

– Both faculty members and students must be able to act as citizens on issues they feel strongly about.

– Students must be able to create additional learning opportunities outside the classroom setting.

A statute amendment to require student groups to report on how allocations are spent is in final action for tonight, according to the agenda. The legislation is designed to help the allocations committee make better recommendations and decisions in the future based on student groups' use of allocated funds.

Another statute amendment further defines the purpose of allocations committees and will make their operations more efficient, according to the agenda.

A list of euphemisms for Big 12 schools has been put into legislation form, which, according to the agenda, already have been accepted and used by Student Senators. The legislation's purpose is to inform all SGA members of the euphemisms and have them approved in writing.

Baylor University is listed as "the private zone," Texas Tech as "the smart little brother" and Iowa State University as "the red-headed step child."

GRUNGY CLOTHES GIVE AWAY 23-YEAR-OLD BURGLAR WHO ATTEMPTED PLAYING DEAD AT SPANISH FUNERAL HOME

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, Spain – A burglar who broke into a funeral home in Spain tried to fool police by playing dead, but two things gave him away.

First, he breathed. Second, he wore grungy clothes rather than the Sunday best generally favored by those settling in for an eternal rest.

Police and the Crespo Funeral Home say they had no idea what the 23-year-old man was trying to steal in the March 17 break-in in Burjassot, a small town just outside Valencia.

Neighbors living nearby alerted police when they heard the front door of the business being forced open in the middle of the night.

Police officers arrived with the owner, and eventually found the suspect lying on a table in a glassed-in chamber used for viewings of deceased people during wakes.

"The custom here is for dead people to be dressed in suits, in nice clothes that look presentable," said a local police official. "This guy was in everyday clothes that were wrinkled and dirty."

AS APRIL FOOLS JOKE, HILLARY CLINTON CHALLENGES BARACK OBAMA TO BOWL-OFF IN FRONT OF PRESS

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA – Democrat Hillary Rodham Clinton walked somberly into a press conference Tuesday and stood before microphones. Reporters tensed, sensing something big might be afoot.

"This has been a very hard-fought race," she said. "We clearly need to do something so that our party and our people can make the right decision. So, I have a proposal."

The tension grew. Reporters shifted in their seats. Was she dropping out of the race? Offering to join rival Barack Obama as his running mate?

April Fools!

"Today, I am challenging Senator Obama to a bowl-off," Clinton said, provoking relieved laughs from the assembled scribes.

OCTOPUSES ARE THE KINKY CREATURES OF THE SEA, CALIFORNIA RESEARCHERS FIND

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO – Marine biologists studying wild octopuses have found a kinky and violent society of jealous murders, gender subterfuge and once-in-a-lifetime sex.

The new study by researchers from the University of California, Berkeley, who journeyed off the coast of Indonesia found that wild octopuses are far from the shy, unromantic loners their captive brethren appear to be.

The scientists watched the Abdopus aculeatus octopus, which are the size of an orange, for several weeks and published their findings recently in the journal Marine Biology.

They witnessed picky, macho males carefully select a mate, then guard their newly domesticated digs so jealously that they would occasionally use their 20-to-25-centimetre tentacles to strangle a romantic rival to death.

The researchers also observed smaller "sneaker" male octopuses put on feminine airs, such as swimming girlishly near the bottom and keeping their male brown stripes hidden in order to win unsuspecting conquests.

The Truth About Self-defense and Rape
There is a difference between self-defense and fighting. Self-defense is ideally about avoiding and preventing attacks, not looking for a fight.
Many attacks involve the use of alcohol. Avoiding drunks is a good way to avoid being attacked. Be careful when you party.
Most attacks are done by friends and family members, not strangers.
Most attacks against women happen between the ages of 18 and 25. Anyone can be attacked, but the odds are stacked again college age women.
For more information, read the book, Self-defense Theory, Volume One, by Stan Wilson, available at Hastings in Manhattan.

Dancers take long preparation for SpringDance

By David Griffin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"SPRINGDANCE"

7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday
McCain Auditorium

Tickets cost $8-$13 and may be purchased from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays at the McCain Auditorium box office or by calling 785-532-6428.

Autumn Scoggan, sophomore in theater, knows all too well the hard work it takes to prepare for SpringDance.

SpringDance will feature a variety of dance styles with original dance pieces choreographed by K-State's David Ollington, assistant professor of dance; Julie Pentz, assistant professor of dance; and Joyce Yagerline, associate professor of dance.

SpringDance also will include "HRC," a dance choreographed by Tyrone Aiken, guest artist and executive director from Kansas City Friends of Ailey.

The student dancers have been preparing all semester. Auditions were held the third week of the semester, and those chosen have been attending rehearsals since then, Pentz said.

Scoggan has been dancing since the age of 4. She said when she was a child, her mother used to play music at her house, and Scoggan and her sister would dance, so her mother put her in dance classes.

"It seems that people who dance have a connection. It's a unique way to meet people," Scoggan said.

Scoggan will perform in four different pieces Thursday and Saturday night. In preparation, she said she has been watching a lot of different styles of dance and doing a lot of research.

Scoggan said she never has had to do research to prepare for a performance, but she said it was necessary because of the different styles she is required to know.

"All the different styles that I'm doing are really different," Scoggan said. "I have to speak in one of them, so I had to learn how to speak on stage – so that was different."

Doing book work was a definite change in Scoggan's preparation. When Aiken, the guest artist, came to K-State, Scoggan studied his company and the different styles he performs.

Along with her studies, Scoggan said she rehearses six to seven times a week for 45 minutes to two hours.

Those in attendance will see a variety of diverse performances like ballet, a performance with the K-State jazz ensemble and a performance using iChat. An electronic percussion group in Arizona will play through a live feed with a live African drumming ensemble with live dance.

"It's a show for everyone," Pentz said.

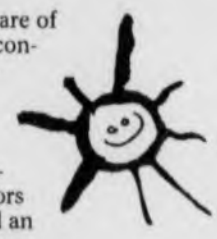
Climate hype?

People should look at the research

MARK WAMPLER

"Earth Hour" is the latest happening in the international environmentalist community, which CNN describes as a "worldwide campaign to highlight the waste of electricity and the threat of climate change."



"There's a widespread belief that somehow people in the United States don't understand that this is a problem – that we're lazy and wedded to our lifestyles," said Richard Moss, member of the Nobel Peace Prize-winning Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the climate change vice president for World Wildlife Federation. "[Earth Hour] demonstrates that that is wrong," he said in Chicago on Saturday.

Perhaps the people of the United States understand the problem all too well. Maybe they really "don't understand" the disaster of climate change simply because they understand that many reports are nothing but unfounded research and scare tactics. Perhaps they understand that the academic and scientific "universal consent" on the reality and detriment of climate change the media so readily propagate is, in fact, not so consenting.

In actuality, leading scientists are divided on the seriousness of the perceived global warming threats. While the cries of ignorance are abound, there is not an overwhelming amount of scientific data that supports climate change disaster.

James Lovelock, a man Rolling Stone calls "one of the most eminent scientists of our time" calls global warming "irreversible" and predicts that by the end of the century, more than 6 billion people will die. He believes that by this time, North America and Europe will have heated by more than 14 degrees Fahrenheit, nearly two times what the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change is predicting. Lovelock holds a more extreme view on climate change, but his highly questionable conclusions and apocalyptic speech is far from unusual.

Al Gore, the face of climate change, has said, "It is a mistake to think of the climate crisis as one in a list of issues that will define our future. It is the issue." Gore is apparently unaware of the AIDS crisis and the consequences of future Chinese/American relations.

These doomsday predictions are nothing new. In 1998, Investors Business Daily published an article on Frederick Seitz, the first president of the National Academy of Sciences and winner of the National Science Medal. The article reports Seitz being "slammed in government journals and the mainstream press for his departure from the party line on global warming."

Seitz's "departure" came when he signed a cover letter for the Petition Project, an effort by scientists skeptical of the global-warming mania. The petition states that "there is no convincing evidence" that carbon dioxide and other so-called greenhouse gases are causing "a catastrophic heating of the Earth's atmosphere and disruption of the Earth's climate." More than 19,000 scientists have signed the petition, which can be found at www.oism.org/pproject.

Bjorn Lomborg, an outspoken scientific voice for properly understanding climate change is, unsurprisingly, ridiculed and called "unscientific" for his skepticism of imminent climate change disaster.

The Washington Post's review of Lomborg's newest book, "Cool It," says, "The title of this highly readable book has a double meaning: Steps should be taken against global warming, but unsupported claims that climate change will lead to global catastrophe and human calamity should be avoided."

In other words, rhetoric of the imminent climate disaster and its profound implications is unwarranted and a gust of hot air – no pun intended. Lomborg doesn't deny the climate is changing but he understands it is not going to irreversibly change the course of the earth.

We certainly need to take care of the earth and claim responsibility for our actions, but the global frenzy of climate change will slowly fade into the annals of history like the scare of Communism, the Y2K meltdown and your parents' 1980s jumpsuits.

TO THE POINT

Opportunities are bountiful in most curricula

With what sometimes seems like an avalanche of classes, assignments and exams, students sometimes only focus on the academic side of college; however, there are plenty of opportunities for students to get involved in outside of the classroom that will help them later on.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

For example, the upcoming Spring Dance offers students a chance in the dance department to become involved in a dance production choreographed by professionals – but the catch is it takes more work and you do not get class credit for the performance.

This is what gets some students. They ask themselves, why work now when I have my whole life to work?

Doing book work does not always provide you the real-world experience you need. But, a lot of employers are looking for graduates with experience.

Many of us here at the Collegian work to get the experience we need so that when we graduate, we will have real-world knowledge of how a newspaper is ran. But, we are students just like you – with full-time classes, homework and yes, somewhat of a life.

There are many other departments on campus that offer jobs and activities related to the area of study in which you want to land a job. So, while it is important to hit the books hard and have fun, it is equally important to prepare yourself for the real world out there.

THE FOURUM

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Is the library going to blow up?

OK, the library is, like, on fire or something, because there's smoke coming out of it, and it's kind of scary.

To the girl who sits by herself at Kramer while she eats: I hope that open seat is for a cowboy.

The football team's slogan should be "To infinity and beyond."

Thank you, Goo Goo Dolls, for not coming to K-State. The last thing we need is more trash in this town.

Yeah, when KU won their so-called national championship in 1988, they went on probation immediately after that because they had to cheat to do it. Now they're in the Final Four, and they're already on probation. Way to go, Hawks.

So, I'm seeing all these KU license plates around town. What am I — in San Francisco?

My buddy is whipped, and I feel bad for him.

To the blond, shaggy-haired guy wearing a red hat walking by Hale Library at about 2:30 on Tuesday: Lose the Ugg boots. Really. They're for chicks.

Puppy chow: My anti-drug.

To the guy outside of Goodnow juggling: If I had a dollar, I'd toss it to you.

I hate it when people put albums on Facebook of just themselves. I really don't want to look at your ugly face.

How can I defend against zombie attacks if I can't carry on campus?

Gee, I wish I could get paid by the inch for an article I know nothing about to write. Now that'd be really nice instead of having a real job. You know, I thought you had to learn to read before you could write for the Collegian. Unfortunately, it doesn't seem to be the case. Do you know how to use the Internet? Maybe you could pick up a book and learn some state law. Oh, gee, I don't know — just some ideas. Some general thoughts from me, an uninformed non-collegiate writer. Thanks.

I love applesauce.

To the girl who was playing Super Mario Brothers in poli-sci: You're my hero.

If Michael Beasley and Bill Walker had a baby, it would be a walking beast. But at least it would be good at basketball.

OK, let's make a compromise. You can take away my cigarettes when I'm in a bar as long as you let me have my gun on campus.

To the hot guy in my 2-D design class: We should date.

To the girl that said you can't find a good girl at a bar or party: He wants a good girl, not a lame girl.

After my $208 drinking binge Monday night: Living the dream. Living the dream.

I just got my third ticket this week. Screw the campus parking police.

I'm really glad I have too low of self-esteem for the Classy Cats, because apparently their high self-esteem makes them wear skanky outfits that accentuate their flabby stomachs and prove to the world that at least they think they're hot. Thanks, Classy Cats.

OK, so FOX just showed this commercial about the dangers of obesity followed immediately by this Arby's commercial with this giant mountain of roast beef sandwiches. Evil bastards.

Hey, to the guy that drives the Ford Explorer from Johnson County: Sorry your lights are on.

The only good thing about tonight is that I'm crying, and my tears taste like vodka.

My friend said her biggest fear was cheating on her husband. She's not married. So I cut her off the Jungle Juice.

The Fourum is like my boyfriend: I leave a message, but he never calls me back.

If you've seen an opossum, kill it. It's not a pet.

Did you take stupid pills this morning?

To all those sexy women out there: You know, the guys that you're wanting are waiting in Marlatt.

Stress in college could lead to severe career, life problems

ALEX PEAK

Study, nap, snack, cram, nap, scramble, work, binge, repeat and continue to repeat for at least four to five years.

Oh, the life of a college student. It's like one giant pressure cooker that works to thicken our skin, exhaust our mental and physical capacities and make us dangerously competitive in the real world.

Despite the handful of "best years of our lives," the "fun" is starting to wear thin. This education boot camp that encourages mountains full of extracurriculars, enough credit hours to buy a house and a list of internships that could fill three résumés is taking its toll on college students.

A recent Associated Press-mtvU survey expressed the exorbitant levels of stress and anxiety felt by college students. According to the survey, 40 percent of students said they suffer from stress often, and 20 percent said feel it most or all of the time.

In all fairness, most people – college students or not – probably will say they often experience stress. But many students said they have developed eating problems, depression or feelings of failure because of stress from school. Nearly a third of those surveyed said they sometimes want to resort to drugs or alcohol just to relax. One in five have said they've seriously considered dropping out of school, according to the survey.

Even worse, one in six have admitted having friends who've considered committing suicide, and about 10 percent said that thought of doing the same.

How can the same people who suffer stress-induced eating, sleeping and anxiety disorders say they enjoy their lifestyle? This sounds like our generation is being conditioned for disaster.

A healthy, low-stress lifestyle might involve fewer jobs and activities to juggle – according to our society, the route might equate to failure. But get into the mindset of all work and no play, and though you might develop some awful medical condition brought on by stress or even take your own life, you might be granted a higher chance for success.

Despite these dismal statistics, more than 67 percent of students surveyed said they enjoy life and college.

Anyone with common sense knows college equals stress, but should it really reach these levels?

Right now, we're adults in training. Though most of us are old enough to vote, drink alcohol, buy a gun and hold a decent-paying job, we're still in a limbo-like stage where we might act the part of a functioning adult, but we're still under a protective seal until graduation.

Here's the disturbing part: We're underpaid, sleep deprived, many of us possibly malnourished, and we're taking on the world like a fleet of zombies because we're so overstressed. And because this world is so competitive, we're also backstabbing, cutthroats in the race for the perfect job.

We're at a time in our lives when we're developing the habits we'll most likely survive by for the rest of our lives. If we follow the patterns we've laid out, we're in for a scary future. If we work and stress out all the time, where's the room for relationships, family and fun? Imagine how terrible the lives of our children could be if we encourage them to live like we do?

As a stressed college student myself, I can't offer a solution or call to action, but I do hope to offer some pondering points. What will be the move that makes our college experience Jenga tour of stress crash?

Bohannon said he has several of his videos on YouTube, one of which has had nearly 4,000 views.

Bohannon said the skills he learned in the course have helped him find and succeed at a job.

He said he owes most of his knowledge of the subject to Wesch and his class.

"Dr. Wesch gives a lot of leeway – that's what makes him such a wonderful teacher," he said. "He understands that we live in a world now where we have all this access to information. Now that we have all these abilities to access this information, we need to learn how to use it, and Dr. Wesch realizes this."

Wesch is encouraging teachers to use videos in the classroom, especially if they think videos might be beneficial to the class.

"The key is to not be afraid of it and that making videos has been the easiest it's ever been," Wesch said. "If they think video has a place in their curriculum, then they should pursue it."

Parrish's best event still not her favorite

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Donniece Parrish placed 15th at the NCAA Indoor Championship, second in the Big 12 Conference Championships, and she holds the K-State indoor record in the 400-meter dash – but it is not even her favorite event.

"It's not my favorite event, but I do have to agree with the coaches who have been telling me for a while that it's my best event," Parrish said.

The reason Parrish does not like the event is not because of a lack of success. She broke the K-State record by posting a time of 53.15, while running to a second-place finish in the conference championships. She recorded a time of 54.09 in her 15th-place run at nationals. She has also been one of the key runners in the women's 4x400-meter relay.

Parrish said she would rather run the 200-meter dash, because it is long enough for her to overcome a slow start but does not require as much endurance. She said the 400-meter dash is a more physically and mentally demanding race.

"You really have to have a good mindset, because it is a longer race," Parrish said. "You have to mentally prepare yourself that it's going to hurt. No matter how fast or how slow you run it, when you're done it's going to hurt," she said.

After running mostly shorter sprints in high school and her freshman year at Southeast Missouri State, Parrish transferred to K-State, where the coaches saw the potential for her to be a successful 400-meter runner.

"My opinion was that she was a quarter-miler," coach Cliff Rovelto said. "She's good and has good leg speed to have success in the shorter races. But over this couple-year process, she has gradually accepted that she can run a pretty good 400."

In her first two years at K-State, Parrish ran the 4x400-meter relay and trained with K-State's previous 400-meter dash record holder, Shunte Thomas, but didn't find major success in the event until her senior year.

Parrish battled hamstring and shin injuries her first two years at K-State but has been able to overcome them because of her work off the track.

"My first year, I was running more short events because I wasn't strong enough for the 400," Parrish said. "Once I got more serious about the lifting and getting my strength level up, I was able to prepare for the 400."

Rovelto said Parrish was running the 400-meter dash about 1.5 seconds faster this indoor season than outdoor season last spring. She could be poised to post even faster times this spring, as most runners cut about a second off their times running on larger outdoor tracks.

"The first time she runs an open 400 outdoors, she's probably going to [set a personal record] by two or 2.5 seconds," he said. "That's unheard of for a girl that's a senior."

While Rovelto is impressed by Parrish's outstanding improvement, he is not surprised. He said her success is a product of her hard work and acceptance of her success in the 400-meter dash.

"I think she has made so much progress over the last couple of years; it's remarkable," he said. "But there's no magic or anything like that. It's just a process of her accepting that she can run that race and also a process of her getting stronger, both in the weight room and in being able to handle longer training sessions."

Parrish's teammates also saw her potential in the 400-meter dash.

"I always knew she would make it to nationals, just like I know she will make it to nationals outdoors," said senior sprinter and relay teammate Marnyka Honeycutt. "Donniece is extremely gifted and has a lot of potential. I think she can go even farther than what she thinks she can."

Rovelto said showing Parrish the 400-meter dash is her best race has not been a matter of telling her but rather showing her in practices and in races that she is strong enough to compete and be successful in the event.

"The one thing I have tried to impress upon her is because she has such good leg speed, if she really embraces this race, I think she can be one of the best in America," he said.

Football team releases 2008 season schedule

2008 K-STATE FOOTBALL SCHEDULE

Date	Opponent	Location
Aug. 30	North Texas	Manhattan
Sept. 6	Montana State	Manhattan
Sept. 17	at Louisville (ESPN2)	Louisville, Ky.
Sept. 27	Louisiana-Lafayette	Manhattan
Oct. 4	Texas Tech	Manhattan
Oct. 11	at Texas A&M	College Station, Texas
Oct. 18	at Colorado	Boulder, Colo.
Oct. 25	Oklahoma	Manhattan
Nov. 1	at Kansas	Lawrence
Nov. 8	at Missouri	Columbia, Mo.
Nov. 15	Nebraska	Manhattan
Nov. 22	Iowa State	Manhattan

The K-State Athletics Department announced Tuesday that the Wildcats will play Montana State on Sept. 6 in a nonconference football game, finalizing the 2008 football schedule.

The game against the Bobcats replaces the Fresno State game that originally was set for that date. Kickoff times for non-televised home games at Bill Snyder Family Stadium will be announced at a later date.

The Wildcats will open the 2008 season with two home games, beginning with North Texas on Aug. 30, before traveling to Louisville on Sept. 17 for a 7 p.m. nationally-televised game with the Cardinals. After hosting Louisiana-Lafayette on Sept. 27, the Wildcats dive into conference play the following week as Texas Tech visits Manhattan in a rematch of the first-ever Big 12 Conference football game back in 1996.

Four of the next five conference games will be on the road for the Wildcats as K-State visits Texas A&M on Oct. 11 and Colorado the following week on Oct. 18.

Oklahoma then heads to Bill Snyder Family Stadium on Oct. 25, while road tests at Kansas (Nov. 1) and Missouri (Nov. 8) open the month of November. K-State will close the regular season with two home games as Nebraska visits Manhattan on Nov. 15 before Iowa State makes the trip south on Nov. 22.

NCAA Tournament falls short of usual madness

MIKE DEVADER

We are all happy K-State made it into the NCAA Tournament this year for the first time since 1996, but obviously, the Wildcats aren't satisfied with their second-round loss to Wisconsin.

The Big Dance is the most exciting sporting event in the world, but this year's games haven't been close at all. Usually, there is more than one Cinderella team that manages to sneak its way into the Sweet 16 or even the Elite Eight. This year, the only real surprise to most viewers was Davidson.

Even with a surprise team in the mix, most of the games are usually fun to watch. To me, ever since the Sweet 16, most of the games have been boring blowouts. I thought the bracket was supposed to get harder with the more games a team won, not easier.

KU and North Carolina probably had the easiest roads to the Final Four in recent memory because neither team was remotely challenged until they got to the Elite Eight.

Davidson played Wisconsin in the third round and crushed them 73-56. Stephen Curry was able to work his magic and keep his team's momentum alive, so they deserved to go on to face the Jayhawks. We'll never know if K-State would have been able to match up better with the likes of Michael Beasley and Bill Walker on the inside.

Unfortunately, Curry and Davidson weren't able to keep their dream alive as they lost to that team from Lawrence 59-57. They had a chance to win the game with a three at the buzzer, but KU forced someone besides Curry to beat them, and it didn't happen.

It was sad.

Now, the Final Four is upon us, and it's Memphis against UCLA and KU against North Carolina.

If Memphis plays the same as when they made Texas look stupid in their last game, there's nothing stopping them from walking into the title game. The only problem is they're going to play either the most hated team by Wildcat fans or one of the most hated players in college basketball.

How many people really want to see KU or Roy Williams and Tyler Hansbrough playing for the title?

That reminds me, who else thinks Beasley is better than Hansbrough?

Anyway, as much as I despise the Jayhawks, I also have to be realistic.

KU is awesome.

They're really, really good, but I don't want them playing for the title. It could turn out to be a good flashback for KU fans since they would once again have to play against a freshman phenom in the championship like they did when they played Syracuse.

So, with all No. 1 seeds making it to the Final Four, hopefully these games can reignite the excitement of a rather poor tournament.

Cats end home stand with win against Central Arkansas

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team capped off a nine-game home stand by beating the Central Arkansas Bears 13-6 at Tointon Family Stadium on Wednesday afternoon.

The Wildcats (15-12) were able to complete a sweep of the Bears, getting past UCA easily in both games of the series.

After shutting out the Bears in Tuesday evening's game 6-0, junior starting pitcher Todd Vogel kept the momentum rolling by striking out Central Arkansas lead-off man Kevin Rawls with three pitches.

In the second inning, Vogel struck out all three batters.

Coach Brad Hill said the pitching staff did a good job, but didn't think the Wildcats put together a complete game.

"I was happy with about eight and a half innings," Hill said. "That half inning was pretty bad.

"I thought we played hard today, and we continue to take good swings," he said.

Vogel was pulled after the second inning in favor of freshman reliever Justin Aragon. The freshman got the win by pitching just one inning but striking out two batters.

Justin Lindsay throws a pitch during his one inning of relief Wednesday afternoon at Tointon Family Stadium. To keep his pitchers fresh and loose coach Brad Hill used eight pitchers in the game.

In the bottom of the third, the Wildcats began to pile on the runs.

K-State's stretch of scoring in four consecutive innings was ignited by the bat of sophomore Adam Muenster. He gave the Wildcats a 2-0 lead by ripping a two-run double.

The hit extended Muenster's hitting streak to 12 games, something he said he does not pay attention to.

"I can't think about that stuff," Muenster said. "It's all about trying to get a good pitch to hit.

"If it happens, it happens. If it ends, it ends."

The lone bright spot for Central Arkansas came in the top of the fifth as first baseman Payton Seelinger hit a homer to left center, ruining the Wildcats effort to record three straight shutouts.

The Wildcats responded by exploding for 10 combined runs in the bottom of the fifth and sixth innings.

Third baseman Nate Tenbrink highlighted the scoring in the fifth by belting his team-leading sixth homer with a two-run shot over the left centerfield wall.

In the sixth inning, the first two Wildcat batters got hit by pitches.

Tenbrink came up again and delivered with a two-RBI double. At the end of six, the Wildcats had a comfortable 13-1 lead.

Central Arkansas was able to get some late runs but the Bears were scoring runs against a K-State team that had gone to the bench to get new players into the game.

With a successful home stand, the Wildcats now have a day off before traveling to College Station, Texas, to take on Texas A&M in a three-game, Big 12 Conference showdown.

"I think we went 8-1 on the home stand, and that's a positive," Hill said. "We have got to win on the road."

Royals stop Tigers, move to 2-0

By Associated Press

DETROIT – If Brian Bannister were a lefty, people would call him crafty. Instead, he'll have to settle for effective.

Bannister stymied the Detroit Tigers' heralded offense Wednesday, allowing two singles in seven innings as the Kansas City Royals won 4-0.

"That's a very good lineup, and they are going to score a lot of runs, but I also know that they have a lot more expectations than we do," Bannister said. "That's why I wanted to put them under pressure early."

Bannister doesn't try for a lot of strikeouts, preferring to induce grounders and fly balls.

"I get criticized for the way I pitch, but I believe in it, and it's working," said Bannister, who went 12-9 with a 3.87 ERA as a rookie last season.

Kansas City is 2-0 for the second time in 28 years. The Royals won their first nine games in 2003 en route to their only winning season since 1993.

Edgar Renteria had Detroit's only hits, all singles.

Unusual therapy

Campus offers several atypical stress relief options

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Terrariums, dish gardens, sand trays, bouquets of flowers, fruits, vegetables and computer monitoring systems share a common characteristic for everyday stress – they work as supplemental therapies with traditional counseling services.

HORTICULTURAL THERAPY

Horticultural therapy is an example of adjunctive therapy, which is additional treatment used with main treatments like traditional talk counseling.

Richard Mattson, coordinator of K-State's horticultural therapy program, said horticultural therapy differs from other adjunctive therapies like music, art, dance and theater because it involves a living medium – nature.

"Being close to nature is necessary as students try to reduce their pressures and tensions involved in college life this time of the semester," said Mattson, professor of horticulture.

Other examples of horticultural therapy include eating fruits and vegetables and daily exercise, Mattson said.

"[Horticultural therapy is] going out and walking across this beautiful campus," he said. "This is an incredible piece of nature that surrounds us – these things help reduce our stress, and exercise is critical."

Mattson, who is writing a Human Dimensions of Horticulture textbook, said he has done research on the presence of plants and their effects on humans' blood pressure and heart rate. Dish gardens in a work setting and Bonsai trees are horticultural examples that help reduce stress levels, Mattson said.

"These things are very small, but they are very representative of nature and help us relax and give us a sense of peacefulness and tranquility," he said. "One foliage plant or bouquet of flowers can bring about changes in our bodies and our stress level."

PLAY THERAPY, MEDIATION

K-State's Family Center, located at the Campus Creek Complex, offers mediation services and play therapy for students. Family Center services work on a sliding-fee scale that considers income and number of family members.

Mediation serves as a resource for conflict resolution because it incorporates an impartial third party who helps contending people reach a mutually acceptable settlement about issues, said Nancy O'Conner, clinic director at the Family Center.

Play therapy also can be used with stressful situations, grief and loss with families or couples, O'Conner said. Sand-tray therapy is an example of play therapy offered at the Family Center.

Sand-tray therapy incorporates sand and miniatures that represent certain people, characters or structures that people use to create a story about their lives, O'Conner said.

"We often begin with the creation of a picture of anything you'd like in the sand – it's a very general request," she said. "Somebody might create a picture of a stressor they're undergoing or a conflict that that might be having – they could use anything. It could be a picture of something that's going really well for them."

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN
Sand-tray therapy is a form of play therapy that is mostly used for children and adolescents as a more comfortable way to display how they feel.

Play therapy incorporates actions as a language through a strength-based approach, O'Conner said.

"Often times, someone doesn't have the words to adequately describe how they might be feeling or what it is they are thinking," she said. "We help people to look for things that are going well in their lives and look for ways to continue those."

For K-State students and adults, O'Conner said she recommends they use play therapies as a combination with traditional talk therapy. Family Center employees often ask people to express their situations through crafts or a particular song.

"There are so many experiential ways that people can express what's happening in their lives in addition to talk therapy, and I think it's helpful to tap into those," she said.

BIOFEEDBACK

The Danskin Performance Enhancement Center at University Counseling Services features biofeedback specialists who help people develop self-regulation skills in performance enhancement and stress management. The program includes four computerized biofeedback systems, which monitor skin temperature, heart rate, brain waves, respiration and other body functions.

Tape, wire tree on campus one of many forms of public art

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A tree made of chicken wire, packing tape and old computer parts has appeared on campus. The unorthodox creation is the product of a K-State art class that just completed a section on public art.

Sue Atchison, art education coordinator and instructor of the course, explained public art as "art that is accessible to the public for viewing."

Atchison also said one of the topics her class has discussed is what constitutes public art and what does not.

The tree, which was "planted" north of Willard Hall, received several glances from passersby, and some even stopped to examine it closer.

In addition to the chicken wire and packing tape, various computer parts were included in the trunk to represent how technology affects our daily lives. Hanging from the branches were 11 iPods, one for every member of the class, representing technology on hand.

Each iPod was designed by one of the students in the class and read "now planting" instead of "now playing."

The tree will remain on display until Monday, and its fate has not yet been decided. Some members of the class said it would probably just get thrown away, while another suggested selling it on eBay.

Rachel Fontenot, graduate student in curriculum and instruction, said she wanted people to better recognize and appreciate public art when they see it.

"A lot of people don't recognize that there's art all over our community, that they just ignore it," Fontenot said.

"It's important to know that it is there and that it's important."

Students should take a trip when senioritis hits hardest

ADAM REICHENBERGER

Senioritis is ... blah, well you get the idea.

Ironically, I was given this months ago and have put it off until now.

Senioritis has plagued me since my sophomore year of high school. My parents used to get after me for procrastinating. But it's not that – it's just that there's a point you reach in life where you realize what you are doing day in and day out is absolutely useless.

Unfortunately for me, that point was realized eight years ago.

For some of you seniors who already have jobs and careers lined up, it's quite obvious – as long as you don't completely bomb this semester – you'll be all right.

"But you know, Bob, that will only make someone work just hard enough not to get fired."

Now that I'm almost done with my undergraduate studies, and I've spent some time wandering from field to field, I have found things I enjoy again and feel the need to pursue. I'll be going to grad school in the fall for economics, and for those of you doing something similar, it's absolutely crucial we do well in our last semester.

So what then? You've got to do something fast. Something to rejuvenate yourself, to revitalize yourself, something you can't do in Manhattan. You gotta get away from it all.

Last Friday, I was in a bad mood. I had enough. I spent most of the day in a hospital in Topeka, and as I drove back to Manhattan, heading up K-177, there was only one thing going through my mind: "God, I don't want to be here."

I had to get away. So I phoned a couple friends, and the next thing I knew we were passed out in a residence hall lobby in Chadron State College in northwest Nebraska. We broke into a building, and upon being caught, sweet talked our way onto the couches.

The next morning we went up to Mount Rushmore – it sucks – and then farther north to Rapid City where we bowled a few frames and headed home. On the way, we passed a thousand trains, a couple ghost trucks, some scary, scary people in Broken Bow and at least 20 dead cats.

The dead cats baffled me; they were seriously scattered all across Nebraska. I couldn't figure it out. At one point, I saw two kittens playing patty cake in the middle of the highway, and thought to myself, "What the hell?" I slowed the car. "Kitties, what are you doing here? Go home."

By that time they had moved on to licking each other and obviously had no thought or worry about a wanderer passing through with a little advice. Stupid cats.

But I got back here with a broken phone and everything's wonderful now. All I needed was a break. I suggest you do the same.

Try getting rid of your phone too. I got mine replaced but have yet to activate the new one. I find the only thing my phone does for me is remind me no one's calling. But without it, I can still pretend.

STRESS | Biofeedback techniques, drama therapy also provide relief

Web site.

More information about K-State's biofeedback services can be found at www.k-state.edu/counseling/student/biofeedback.htm.

Stress-reduction techniques are important because stress often shows in other physical conditions like insomnia and anxiety.

Besides biofeedback, Counseling Services often doesn't incorporate adjunctive therapies, said Jane Hansen, Counseling Services psychology intern.

DRAMA THERAPY

While K-State offers a drama-therapy program through the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance, the university doesn't offer a counseling program where people can receive treatment through drama therapy.

However, cities like Topeka, Lawrence and Salina offer drama therapy through organizations, said Sally Bailey, K-State associate professor, director of graduate studies in theatre and director of the drama-therapy program.

Drama therapy uses action through masks, puppets, role playing and performances as an expression for stressors, Bailey said.

"In a global setting, it's more useful in doing something to connect with other people and having fun – that can be very stress relieving," she said. "In a specific sense, you can work on a specific problem and – under it – better and come up with some solutions."

While people can express themselves through artful forms, drama therapy must take place with a certified drama therapist, Bailey said.

"People can certainly use the arts to express themselves to understand more about themselves, but that's not necessarily using drama therapy – that's just using the arts for therapeutic purposes."

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Study finds more people living to, past 100

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent study suggests the compression of morbidity and compression of disability might be separate phenomena, making it easier for people to live to age 100.

Compression involves delaying morbidity or disability so it takes up a smaller percentage of a person's total lifespan. The study was published Feb. 11 in the Archives of Internal Medicine.

The prevalence of centenarians has increased dramatically during the last 20 years, the study's authors wrote in "Disentangling the Roles of Disability and Morbidity in Survival to Exceptional Old Age." The study's purpose was to determine the absence or presence of disability among centenarian survivors.

Survivors, according to the study, were defined as individuals who developed at least one of the following conditions before age 85: chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (chronic lung conditions that obstruct airways in the lungs), dementia, diabetes, heart disease, hypertension, osteoporosis, Parkinson's disease or stroke. The authors selected age 85 as a cutoff based on the commonly used definition among scholars of the "oldest old."

The New England Centenarian Study was a cross-sectional study

(the study took place at a single point in time) of persons 97 years or older who were referred to as centenarians. The centenarians were recruited through mass mailings, local census records and media reports. Data for the analysis was collected through telephone and e-mail interviews. If participants were unable to complete the information themselves, family members or friends assisted with the questionnaire, according to the study.

Data were analyzed from 739 persons – 523 women ages 100-119 and 216 men ages 97-113 were interviewed. Among centenarians, 32 percent were survivors, or those who developed an age-related disease or condition before age 85.

In a telephone interview, lead author Dr. Lara Terry said the study examined physical function and how it relates to the development of chronic age-related diseases and longevity.

"What surprised us was that nearly a third of the participants had an age-related illness for 15 years or more and yet they survived to very old age and, in many cases, they

International Week to let students learn about other cultures

By Tierra Gordon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Next week every student and Manhattan community member will get a chance to come together and celebrate diversity at K-State during the 2008 International Week festivities.

The week begins with a talent show on Sunday and will include numerous activities and opportunities for students to learn more about international student groups on campus.

"It is to celebrate diversity on the K-State campus and bring people together for cross culture awareness," said Lenka Hadamova, president of the International Coordinating Council.

"We try to improve cultural exchanges, and provide opportunities for everyone on campus and the Manhattan community," said Jimmy Wu, second-year graduate student and English Language Program activity coordinator.

International Week coincides with Philippine-American Heritage Week and will include a movie showing on Tuesday evening and a Barrio Fiesta on Thursday afternoon.

Wall of symbolic hatred by Haymaker torn down

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Lucas Brooks, senior in architecture, demolishes the wall of hate Thursday evening across the street from Haymaker and Moore halls. Brooks helped build the wall and said, "It's exciting to see it come down."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Words of hatred disappeared as the wall of discrimination, a graffiti wall with offensive words that symbolized the hatred people hear everyday, crumbled.

Students gathered across the street from Haymaker and Moore halls Thursday evening to help tear down an almost six-foot cinder block wall that was created by students in the residence halls last week to fight hatred. The wall was then torn down in a symbolic way of ridding people of those words.

Ashley Eargle, coordinator of the event and junior in life science, said the idea of a "wall of hate" was to have a diversity event that would affect everyone.

"I think the campus in general is becoming more diverse," Eargle said. "I'm hoping that this will impact them and they will realize that they have to change how they act."

David Griffin Sr., associate dean for diversity in secondary education, opened the event. He spoke about the significance one person can make and the effect hateful words have on society.

"We can tear it down symbolically, but what are we going to do humanely to destroy

In August 2007, Helen Toburen was diagnosed with type 2 diabetes. Since then, she has lost 20 pounds after she eliminated sugars from her diet. Toburen said diabetes has not changed her lifestyle.

Retirement community resident has seen little change by aging process

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Helen Toburen's doctors diagnosed her with type 2 diabetes in August 2007, but Toburen said her life hasn't changed since then.

Toburen, 95, is a resident at Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community in Manhattan. She continues to exercise daily and drives her car even though she is almost 100 years old. She lives at Meadowlark Hills with her husband, Vernon, 97.

"I don't feel like I've been neglected of food because they've done so many things for diabetic persons that it's not hard to lead that life," said Helen, who lost 20 pounds after she quit eating sugar last fall. "As far as I'm concerned, it's not the hardest thing I've had to deal with."

A study published in February in the Archives of Internal Medicine found that 32 percent of individuals interviewed who developed an age-related disease or condition before age 85 could still live to be close to 100 years-old or older. Though she developed diabetes in her 90s, Toburen could be considered an example of delaying morbidity and disability as people approach 100 years of age.

About three or four years ago, Meadowlark Hills ran a series of TV commercials promoting its community, and one commercial featured Toburen playing basketball.

Toburen said physical activity has always played

County health board treats all comers

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Workers at the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department have committed themselves to offering K-State students and Manhattan residents health services at a cheaper price than other health organizations in the area for more than 55 years.

The mission of the health board, which does not require its patients to have health insurance, is to improve the health of the public by preventing epidemics and diseases, assuring health services for everyone, responding to emergencies and encouraging healthy behaviors, said Charles Murphy, administrator and health officer.

The health board was started in 1952 when the city and county came together to create an entity that would provide public health services for the city and county, Murphy said.

"Public health services are many and varied," Murphy said. "Their common purpose is to safeguard the health of our community. Our health department is a governmental board and open to the public. We follow public rules and have a functional – not advisory – board. We are also appointed by city and county commissioners."

The health department operates on a budget of more than $2.5 million, and in 2006, its primary funding came from 62 percent grants and contracts, 17 percent city and county support and 17 percent fees, Murphy said. Most of the departments have charges, but its administrators do not refuse to take patients because of their inability to pay.

The department sponsors the Women, Infants and Children Health program, as well as Family Planning, which is utilized most by K-State students, said Kathy Dickey-Wilson, clinic supervisor. The program's services include birth control, education, pap tests, pelvic exams, testing for sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy tests.

"Our health department is cheaper than private practices, and we offer a lot of programs that are of interest to students," Dickey-Wilson said. "A lot of students take advantage of our services. We also offer birth control and STD testing without parental consent, so if students start school and are under 18, we can help them."

Some students said they appreciate that the health center does not require its patients to have insurance.

"I come to the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department because my parents don't financially support me, and I don't have insurance," said Kristi Mendenhall, freshman in Spanish. "I only pay 20 percent of all the fees built up here. Lafene is much more expensive. Although seeing a doctor there is free, you have to pay for everything after that."

All exams are done by female physicians, and the department's programs help fulfill students with the services they need, Dickey-Wilson said.

"Lafene and other neighboring health centers do a lot of the same things we do, but you have to pay a lot more," she said. "We are more inclined to help everyone, no matter their financial status."

PROGRAMS OFFERED

The health department offers various programs to its patients, including:

Clinics - blood pressure checks, immunizations and vaccinations

The Environmental Program - inspects food, home and water safety

Primary Care - basic health care to Manhattan residents

Child Care - child safety and schooling

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Wagner's era ends; Peele's just begins

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Student Body President Matt Wagner sits at his last meeting as president next to Lydia Peele, who will take over his position next week.

At 9:15 p.m. Thursday evening, the 2007-08 Student Senate closed its final legislative period and moved into the second open period.

Faculty Senate Representative Bill Muir used this time to commend Student Body President Matt Wagner, senior in information management systems, and Senate Chair Nick Piper, senior in finance, for working together for the good of the student body despite being rivals for student body president in last year's election.

"I cannot be quiet during this kind of period without saying something to recognize them," Muir said during the open period. "It's been a real pleasure."

Second to last to speak was President Wagner. He singled out several individuals, as did those who spoke before him. He also commended the entire body for the amount of work it accomplished over the course of the year.

"We have taken on steps that would have been insurmountable any other way," he said.

One thing he stressed to the Senators about their future was "What are you building that's bigger than yourself?"

Student senators from the College of Veterinary Medicine will have an easier time. A SGA constitutional amendment will allow vet-med students to miss meetings without being expelled and to assign proxies to vote for them in their absence.

A statute amendment was voted down in Senate last night, which, if passed, would have required student groups to report to the allocations committee on how they spend allocation money.

Wagner debated on the negative for the amendment.

Having the group report back to the committee, might cause the allocations committee to see their future events in a false light, Wagner said.

He argued that some factors might have existed during the initial event that wouldn't be an issue for a second event. Another group might have had an event at the same time that detracted from the event's audience, or the weather might have been bad.

When the meeting was adjourned, the 2008-2009 Senate was sworn in.

400 fight fanatical Phelps church with protest of own

KELSEY CHILDRESS

The Westboro Baptist Church, led by the infamous Fred Phelps, found itself on the opposite side of the picket lines on Sunday as 400 people protested the church, according to a March 31 Associated Press article in the Kansas City Star.

Phelps and his followers are known around the country for picketing against homosexuals at various funerals and events, including the stateside memorial service of Heath Ledger (for portraying a gay character in the movie "Brokeback Mountain"), and the Manhattan High School graduation ceremony.

According to a Feb. 15 article by the Atlanta-based gay and lesbian newspaper Southern Voice, the protest against Westboro Baptist was part of the "Million Fag March" that was organized by Kansas City resident Chris Love.

"At most, we're hoping that [Fred Phelps' Westboro Baptist Church] hears the message and realizes that there is an opposing voice that is equally as powerful as their own (or at least, as powerful as they perceive it to be)," Love said in the article. "At the least, we hope to hold an event that will bring both homosexual and heterosexual people together for a united cause for one day. And in Kansas, no less."

Christina Klein | COLLEGIAN

The picketers held signs promoting love, tolerance and compassion as the nonviolent march started in Topeka's Gage Park around 11 a.m., according to a March 30 article in the Topeka Capital-Journal.

Love stated that he wanted people to see that not all Kansas residents were like the Phelps family.

This is the first formal protest held against the Westboro Baptist Church, and hopefully, it will not be the last. Phelps' messages of overwhelming hate on his Web site also encourages church members to picket funerals of those who died in Iraq, claiming that the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, were God's revenge for U.S. acceptance of homosexual lifestyles.

"Your dead soldiers are only the first fruits of your destruction, only small adumbrations of the wrath which God has stored up in his armory against this proud, evil nation," the Web site states in a description of an upcoming funeral picket in Festus, Mo., for Army Pfc. Andy Habsieger.

The sanctity of death and funeral rites should be preserved. Because Phelps doesn't have the decency to give grieving family members the respect they deserve, legislation passed to prevent picketing is the only way to stop him and his church.

The only supporters Phelps has are those lost souls he has manipulated into believing his justification of hatred toward Catholics, Jews, homosexuals, Muslims and African-Americans.

The 'Million Fag March' hopefully will be the start of a stronger resistance against Phelps' continuous pickets. According to www.millionfagmarch.com, "38 states have introduced bills to limit protests near funerals, and at least 29 of those states have passed such measures." Phelps claims this is a violation of freedom of speech. Phelps deserves a taste of his own medicine, and hopefully more people fighting for lesbian, gay and transgender rights will come forward to help Love and his supporters show Phelps that most Kansans don't agree with his message of hatred and intolerance.

Comprehension of English language essential in U.S.

MARQUIS CLARK

I've always taken a neutral position on the necessity of speaking English in the United States. I've been in multilingual classrooms and seen the benefits of young students being exposed to multiple languages. I come from a town with a high percentage of non-English speaking citizens and find the culture that has developed there delightful. But the birth of my daughter and the subsequent ordeal of dealing with the healthcare system has forced my hand. And now more than ever, I recognize the necessity for a national language.

Bilingualism is essential in commerce and impossible in administration. The U.S. government simply lacks the resources and ability to adequately accommodate each language spoken in our country. It is as impractical for the federal government to mandate comprehensive language inclusion as it is for the private industries to forgo it.

If you own a business in southwest Kansas, the inability to speak Spanish is a death sentence – but if you can't speak Russian, not as big a problem. Private businesses that want to succeed often adapt to their consumers. But a country where government business is conducted in English and the laws that protect both citizens and non-citizens are in English does its citizens a disservice by having it remain "unofficial."

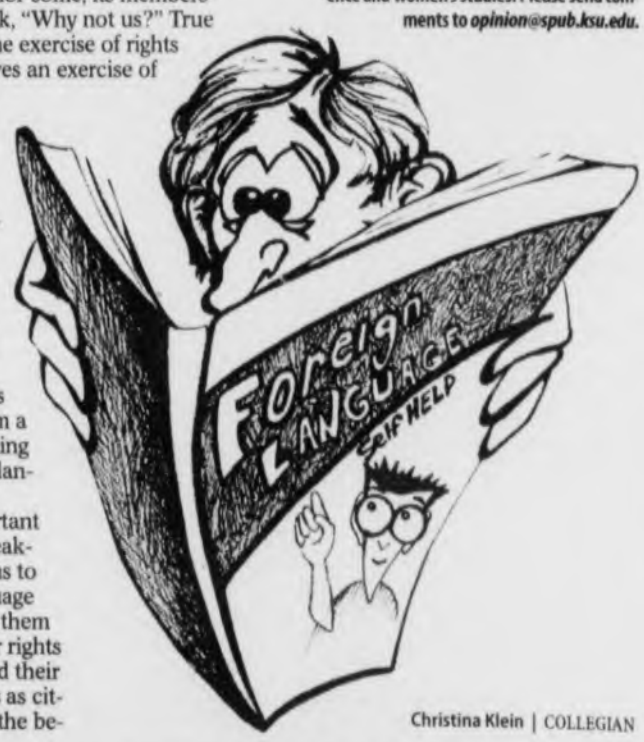
An amendment put forth by Sen. James Inhofe, R-Okla., the Official English Act of 2007 (S.1335), would make English the official language of the United States.

"This is not just about preserving our culture and heritage, but also about bettering the odds for our nation's newest potential citizens," Inhofe said. It is among many pieces of legislation periodically placed before our national legislature, and like most before it, it might fail to pass. According to CNN, 26 states had individually passed some sort of official English legislation by 2005.

This debate is, to put it mildly, a cantankerous one. The ACLU's response to Inhofe's bill making English our national language stated, "[An] English-only amendment would punish citizens who need access to medical care and disaster relief, and it would raise new barriers to learning English." Unfortunately those people are already being punished.

Critics say the bill will deny citizens who are not fluent in English access to vital information. News flash: vital information is not on ballots (the Electoral College and winner-take-all apportioning renders your vote meaningless – deal with it), nor at bilingual supermarkets.

When I spent an interminable amount of time in the neonatal intensive care unit, I was for the first time in my life exposed to vital information. So were the parents of a premature baby named Gisele. While my partner and I were able to decipher the medical jargon that flew at us from every direction about the care of our daughter, while we were able to scour her medical charts to find out just what care she was being provided and in what ways we were being taken advantage of, Gisele's parents – non-native English speakers from my hometown – simply had to accept that the words they could not understand about the most important person in their lives were true.



It is extremely important to be able to advocate for oneself. It's not the letter of the law, but the spirit that has greatest meaning and has opened the door of advancement to the people not specifically included. Our forefathers, when they said "all men," clearly meant all slave or land-owning white men. It was their penchant for flowery language that left the door wide open for enfranchisement for the rest of us.

As each group found its voice and began to understand the language used to claim rights for some, its members were able to ask, "Why not us?" True freedom and the exercise of rights are in themselves an exercise of language. The Bill of Rights does not easily translate. Its context and meaning, just like all great texts, are tied up in its language. However, it is not just non-native speakers who suffer from a misunderstanding of the English language.

It is important for English-speaking U.S. citizens to learn the language that will allow them to protect their rights and understand their responsibilities as citizens. Despite the belief that change and power can come from the outside, time has shown that only through working within the system, by co-opting its language and beliefs, can people truly move into the national discussion.

I clearly recognize the need for all American citizens to be bilingual. But I also understand that America is a land of one million privates and one English-speaking public it is who we are. And that recognition is the key to enfranchisement.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Thank you to whoever resurrected the West Hall porch swing from the dead.

Hey, drivers on Bertrand: There's no stop signs. Why are we stopping?

I'm going on a diet, and it has nothing to do with food and everything to do with boys.

Granted, winning a national championship in basketball is a lot higher-profile than debate, but at least we didn't have to cheat to do it.

A funny thing happened on my way to calling the Fourum.

So, KU Guy is proud of the fact that they won a so-called national championship. Go to Google, type in "University of Kansas NCAA violations 1988" and check it out. Boy, that's something to be proud of.

KU is the only team in NCAA history that was banned from participating in the NCAA tournament the year after they won it because they were put on probation for cheating to win it. This year they could become the only team to win the NCAA tournament while already on probation. What a great accomplishment that would be.

It's 6:30 at night, and I'm drunk.

My teacher just chugged a beer in my microeconomics class.

To the girl with the blond hair: That turtleneck and those dress pants are so last season.

The good girls: I found them. They're hiding in Hale.

Would you tuba players take a bath?

I love it how you are the only person that I can drunk dial on a Wednesday night because everyone else is studying for their test on Thursday.

To the hot guy that lives in Founder's Hill and is from Texas and drives a black SUV: Are you single?

I'm sorry, Fourum, but this is the end. We're breaking up. You don't answer me when I call you and you don't return my calls.

Sigma Nu: The blond girl has a name. It's Danielle.

For full fourum, go to kstatecollegian.com.

FEEDBACK

Hit-and-run accidents, April Fools addressed

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

So, I just saw someone run into my car and drive away. But then I realized it wasn't my car, so it's OK.

To the careless citizen, this is what we call a hit-and-run. Next time, you might want to report this to the campus police so justice can be served. But thank you for doing your Collegian duties and calling the fourum.

When the new parking garage is built, the shadows will consume everyone who enters.

The word here is when; when will the parking garage be built? As of now, not until spring 2009. So tell your shadow friends to wait a while.

I'm still trying to figure out what werewolves and zombies have to do with April Fools Day.

Don't you know, we were trying to protect our readers from the disastrous effects werewolves and zombies can have on campus.

To all those sexy women out there: You know, the guys that you're wanting are waiting in Marlatt.

At the Collegian, we agree with this statement since one of our own heartthrobs lives in Marlatt.

Vietnam Memorial recognizes students who served in conflict

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most students walk by the wooded area east of All Faiths Chapel while barely noticing the circular Vietnam Memorial. The 20-foot-diameter memorial, made from the familiar limestone, recognizes more than 40 K-State students who were either missing or killed in action in Vietnam or Southeast Asia from 1959-75.

The $20,000 memorial was dedicated in 1989 to the several hundred Vietnam veterans who attended K-State, including then-governor Mike Hayden. The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations at the time, Vernon Walters, was the guest speaker.

The memorial - from the planning to its completion – was almost solely organized by K-State. A K-State graduate submitted the winning design and a student contracting group was responsible for most of the construction.

The memorial was originally planned to be built north of Nichols Hall, but the location was moved to its current area to account for its "more contemplative" attitude.

Before the memorial's construction, the only recognition of Vietnam veterans was a plaque in the K-State Student Union. Bill Arck, head of the Vietnam Memorial Planning Committee during its construction, told the K-Stater alumni magazine the memorial was more fitting because the more than 40 students listed on the memorial "walked the campus every day just like you and me. Then they, because of the war, they were gone."

When the memorial was built, there was some debate in the Student Senate as to whether the memorial should remember the deaths of the soldiers or be an anti-war memorial. A large majority of senators voted to make it a traditional memorial to the soldiers.

During the Vietnam War, male students at K-State would huddle around televisions every week to find out if their draft numbers were called.

Though students in college received a deferment from the draft, several hundred K-State students served in the conflict.

Many nontraditional students feel disconnect

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the second article in a four-part series investigating the disconnect among certain student demographics on campus.

Andrea Conrad was 17 years old when she became pregnant with her daughter Leah. She decided to drop out of high school, but quickly regretted it. She decided to get her GED, then applied to K-State.

Conrad, freshman in pre-psychology, is one of 3,413 nontraditional students at the K-State Manhattan and Salina campuses. She belongs to the smallest category of nontraditional students – undergraduates who are younger than 25 years old and married.

Nancy Bolsen, director of adult student services, said in fall 2007, 240 students were in that group.

She said there are also 54 graduates who are married and less than 25 years-old; 1,220 undergraduates who are 25 years-old or more; and 1,899 graduates who are 25 years-old or more. The 3,413 nontraditional students make up 16.6 percent of the K-State population.

Despite being part of a large population of nontraditional students, Conrad said she felt like she didn't have anything in common with the people in her classes.

Many students agree there is a disconnect among traditional and nontraditional students on campus.

As a traditional student, Shane Howard, senior in electronic journalism, said it is not easy to connect with nontraditional students.

"There is a natural disconnect between traditional students and nontraditional," Howard said. "Nontraditional students are forced to do things that traditional students don't have to do, like taking care of kids. It makes them less free to do spur-of-the-moment things."

Howard said any interaction he has with a nontraditional student is usually before, during or after class and always related to class.

Conrad agreed and said even if she were to make close friends with some of the students in her classes, she wouldn't be able to spend time with them after class.

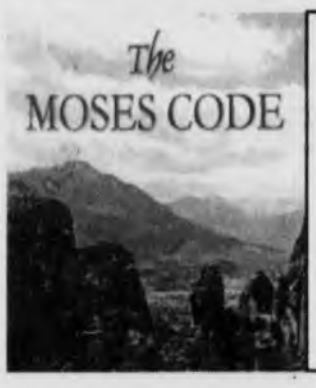
Andrea Conrad, freshman in pre-psychology, enjoys a few minutes at the playground with her two daughters. Conrad is among the demographic minority of students who are both married and less than 25 years old.



"I have to plan ahead and get babysitters, and many of the traditional students do things spur-of-the-moment, so it wouldn't work out," she said.

Conrad takes advantage of the brown bag lunches on Tuesdays that Adult Student Services offers in State-room Two in the K-State Student Union. She said she has made many friends, but all of her friends are further along in their studies, so she doesn't have any classes with them.

Team to face tougher competition this weekend

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis schedule will get considerably tougher this weekend.

K-State will be host to Texas Tech and Intercollegiate Tennis Association No. 4-ranked Baylor this weekend at the Washburn Tennis Facility at Peters Recreation Complex. The match against Texas Tech will begin at 1 p.m on Friday and the tilt against Baylor will begin at noon on Sunday.

For Baylor, senior Zuzana Zemenova, who has posted a 22-5 mark this season, leads the Bears. She has primarily played at the No. 1 singles position, where she has a 16-3 record this spring. Zemenova is ranked No. 24 in the ITA's singles rankings. She is not alone in the rankings, as teammates Lenka Broosova and Taylor Ormond are ranked No. 13 and 28, respectively. Broosova is 36-4 this season, and Ormond is 23-12.

The Wildcats' No. 1 doubles players, senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova, will face a challenge against Baylor. Zemenova and Broosova are the ITA's No. 2 ranked doubles team in the nation.

For the Red Raiders, senior Janet Durham helps lead the efforts in singles play. Durham has posted a 19-10 record this season, mostly as the Raiders' No. 4 player.

Freshman Simone Templeton also has made her presence known, recording a 21-9 mark this season. Templeton is 8-5 as the Raiders' No. 3 player. In doubles play, freshman Kelsy Garland and junior Samantha Van Der Drift have compiled a 5-3 record in the spring.

> "Tech is a team we've had some real tough battles with, and Baylor is one of the elite teams in the country. It should be fun."
> Steve Bietau
> WOMEN'S TENNIS COACH

Coach Steve Bietau said the practice routine has not changed much in light of this weekend's opponents.

"We do almost the same thing," he said. "If you look, not necessarily week to week, but at this week last year, we're doing about the same thing. Our routine doesn't change a lot based on who we're playing. This weekend does present some interesting challenges, with two Big 12 matches. Tech is a team we've had some real tough battles with, and Baylor is one of the elite teams in the country. It should be fun."

K-State (6-8, 2-3 Big 12 Conference) is coming off a weekend that showed two very different sides of its game. Against Oklahoma State on March 28, the Wildcats came back from a 3-2 margin to win 4-3. Meanwhile, the match against Oklahoma proved to be a challenge for K-State. Freshmen Vanessa Cottin and Antea Huljev captured the win in the No. 2 doubles position. It was the duo's second win and first since the loss to Iowa on March 20. But that win was the only one of the day as the Sooners blanked the Wildcats 7-0.

"I think on the positive side I didn't see any lingering results of Saturday's match," Bietau said. "Every competitor has performances they'd like to forget, and in some ways, it was one of those for us. In a lot of ways, it was. But it wasn't completely; our freshman doubles team picked up a win. Although it didn't show up in the win-loss column, both freshmen, Antea and Vanessa, had some positive points in their matches. Getting back to work was the big thing for us."

Huljev and senior Viviana Yrureta will lead the team in singles play. Yrureta has posted a 14-11 mark this season and Huljev is holding steady at 13-13.

ROWING

Team set to travel to San Diego Classic

By Brad Dornes
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's rowing team will travel to California to compete in the San Diego Crew Classic this weekend.

SWEENEY

It will be the 35th-annual year for the competition with more than 120 teams from across the country competing in the two-day event. K-State returns to the competition for the eighth-straight year, and coach Patrick Sweeney said the team is hoping to continue its traditional success of placing in the top six in the varsity boat. The Wildcats have made the Grand Finale race five of the last seven years.

"This is one of the best regattas in the country," said Sweeney. "It is one of the biggest and has some of the best competition that we will see all year."

The Wildcats will be challenged by some of the top teams in the competition on the first day.

They will compete against rowing teams from St. Joseph's, San Diego State, Temple, Villanova, Lehigh and Arizona State in the preliminary race.

K-State goes into the competition with little actual water time, which Sweeney said could be a problem for his team.

"Having such a young team, it is hard to tell how they will respond with such little practice time in actual water," Sweeney said. "There is no way to simulate rowing in water with a machine."

Even with the team being inexperienced and without much practice time, Sweeney remains confident in his team.

"Having such a young team is exciting," he said. "We are capable of placing in the Top 3 crews at the competition, but we have no room for error."

Chiefs' lack of activity needs to change

It's been a busy offseason for teams in the AFC West. Numerous big-name free agent signings and trades have dotted the landscape of the Chiefs' division.

TYLER SHARP

The Oakland Raiders have been particularly busy these past few months, having traded for Atlanta Falcons cornerback DeAngelo Hall and signed Denver Broncos wide receiver Javon Walker.

The San Diego Chargers have made several new staff hires to complement head coach Norv Turner's efforts in his second year.

Finally, the Denver Broncos have re-signed safety John Lynch, signed Detroit Lions linebacker Boss Bailey, and signed Kansas City Chiefs center Casey Wiegmann among others.

What have the Chiefs done in the off-season? Apart from signing Baltimore Ravens wide receiver Devard Darling, whose presence will be profoundly needed following the release of veteran wide receiver Eddie Kennison, Atlanta Falcons linebacker Demorrio Williams, and Washington Redskins kicker Nick Novak – nothing.

Sure, in sheer quantity of name signings, it does not seem to be too bad. But for a team that posted a particularly lackluster season in 2007, the activity leaves a lot to be desired.

This week, during the NFL owners' meetings, some necessary changes are being made. After a majority of owners approved the idea, one defensive player now will wear a communication device so players don't have to go to the sidelines for play calls. New England Patriots head coach Bill Belicheck and owner Robert Kraft have apologized for their role in "Spygate," and according to ESPN.com Raiders head coach Lane Kiffin has reaffirmed the idea that working for Al Davis is "unique."

What have the Chiefs been up to over this busy week in Florida? President and General Manager Carl Peterson and head coach Herman Edwards have been pushing a proposal that would prohibit players' hair from covering their name plates.

While that idea has some merit, it would seem that a more concerted effort to try and reverse the Chiefs' dismal fortunes would be a better approach. The owners took the right action in tabling the motion until a later date.

Perhaps it will allow Peterson and Edwards more time to focus on the upcoming draft?

The reality of the Chiefs' situation is that this off-season is more important for the franchise than perhaps any in recent memory. During the Dick Vermeil and Marty Schottenheimer eras, the Chiefs saw moments of success mixed with average football and losses that never should have happened.

In Edwards' first year there was plenty of tumult to go with initial successes that seemed so distant at season's end.

Peterson will need to continue to loosen his grip on his checkbook in order to attract quality free agents to prevent such a poor result from occurring again.

Also, in a truly un-Carl Peterson-like move, the Chiefs must draft solid players from the first round to the last. 2007 1st round selection Dwayne Bowe and 2005 1st round selection Derrick Johnson show that Peterson is not inept at making immediate impact selections, so hope for a strong draft is not misplaced.

How the 2008 Chiefs will be defined will depend on the efforts of management. Maintaining an active role in the free–agent market and posting a solid draft will make this process considerably easier.

It now is just a question of doing it and distracting Peterson from the latest bump in ticket prices.

Track team headed to Texas, Emporia meets

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team will be splitting up this weekend, sending about 12 Wildcats to Austin, Texas, for the 81st Texas Relays, while most of the team will be competing at the Emporia State Relays.

The historic and prestigious Texas Relays will be hosted by the University of Texas, on Friday and Saturday. The Wildcats are bringing several of their top sprinters and jumpers as well as runners for the women's 4x100-meter, 4x200-meter, and 4x400-meter relays.

The meet offers an atmosphere for track that is rivaled by few others, the team said.

"Rarely do you go to track meets and see so many people," senior Candice Mills said. "The stands are filled from the first event to the last. You don't see that very often. This is one of the big relay meets where people who probably never did track go to watch."

For most teams that travel to Austin, the level of competition is a major draw. Few athletes qualify to run in each event, limiting the field to the best competition.

While the meet used to draw teams from all over the country, most athletes will come from schools in the region. This does not diminish the competition, said coach Cliff Rovelto, because the region has great talent. The Texas Relays also features a large section of high school competitors and serves as a major recruiting event.

Sophomore Kristel Williams competes during the 60 meter hurdles event at the KSU Open on Feb 23. This weekend the team will split up as members travel to two different events.

Matt Castro
COLLEGIAN

"Texas is such a tremendous place for track talent," Rovelto said. "It may be the top state in the country from a recruiting standpoint."

Though the meet was hit by snow last year, the southern Texas weather is also a draw.

"This is a combination of a lot of talent in that area, weather and the tradition make it a place that people like to go," Rovelto said.

While the meet is a large stage for great competition, Rovelto warned about using the meets as a measuring stick for the team's performance early in the outdoor season.

"You expect to see some pretty good performances just because of the level of competition, but you're not going to see people at their best this early," Rovelto said.

Most of the Wildcats will be competing in only their third outdoor event of the season this weekend.

About 40 Wildcats will be headed to Emporia to compete on Saturday. Senior pole vaulter Bryce Bergman said having the team split to go to two different competitions is not unusual, as often athletes travel to different meets that are specialized for certain events.

TRENDS | Hairsprays gained fame in 80s

Big rock-star hairstyles also were popular with men and women during the decade. Egan said some men got perms and wore their hair long, while "straight-laced" men wore clean-cut looks.

Women received "spiral perms" in the 1980s. The hairstyles also were "waterfall," Egan said, which incorporated feathered, layered bands that fell into a cascade of hair.

With makeup, men wore eyeliner and black nail polish in emulation of popular rock musicians like Aerosmith frontman Steven Tyler, Egan said.

Women had their eyebrows heavily lined and grown out like model and actress Brooke Shields. They also wore bright eye shadows in blues, hot pinks, greens and teals.

"You saw just about every color of the rainbow," Egan said. "The monotone, neutral look hadn't even come in yet."

Egan said she went through beauty school during the late 1980s when hairsprays like Aquanet and White Rain were popular among women. The hairsprays were bad for hair and a terrible nightmare for stylists, Egan said.

"When we were going out, if our hair wasn't touching the roof of the inside of the car, it wasn't big enough," Egan said.

maintained good physical function," she said.

Terry said future research studies should focus on different genetic and behavioral pathways to reach old age.

"What our study suggests is that there are multiple ways to get to age 100–some individuals may make it there in perfect health, some may develop illnesses only at the end of their very long lives, and some may have illnesses for many years and still get there," Terry said. "Similarly, there may be different pathways in terms of physical function."

Gayle Doll is the director of K-State's Center on Aging. She said people often show signs of chronic disease based on their personality traits – the five traits of personality are extroversion, agreeableness, conscientiousness, neuroticism and openness.

"If you have a neurotic personality where you focus on how bad you feel all the time, you're not likely going to live a long time because you're going to be focusing on how bad you feel, and when you focus on how bad you feel, you're going to function worse," Doll said. "As these authors seemed to find, there's a certain group of people that even if they have lots of problems continue to live relatively functional and happy lives."

a significant role in her lifestyle. While in their 70s, Toburen and her husband started traveling–they traveled to nine European countries and visited every U.S. state. The Toburens moved to Meadowlark Hills about seven years ago after Vernon developed dementia, Helen said.

Since 1974, Meadowlark Hills has served as a community of inedependent living and assisted living for residents 65 years and older. CBS News featured the retirement community in 2005 as a national model of a retirement community that creates a sense of home.

While three to five centenarians now reside at the community, age isn't a significant focus at Meadowlark Hills, said Jeff Chapman, director of marketing and public relations for Meadowlark Hills and executive director of the Meadowlark Hills Foundation.

"We don't really pay attention to age around here," Chapman said. "What we're interested in is how people are living. It's hard to tell how old people are – we try not to highlight age."

Helen said she hopes she will reach age 100, but she is confident her husband will reach 100.

"You'll be the star of our 100-and-over basketball team if you do," Chapman told her with a laugh.

INT'L WEEK | Students can learn for future

"The biggest event is the International Festival of Talents," Wu said. "It has so many different dances like the Taiwanese Aboriginal Dance, Indian Shadow Dance, and the Chinese traditional and modern music."

Wu also said that the Cultural Exhibition, which will be held in the Union Courtyard, will have 11 countries participating in it, and they will have a table to display information about the culture.

It is important for students to learn more about different cultures around the world and be able to step outside of their own cultures and experience others, Wu said.

"You are here to learn not only about yourself but to change your way of life, and International Week will teach you a flexible way to do it and have fun at the same time," Hadamova said.

Going to the events will help students meet new people and use their classroom knowledge in a social setting, Wu said.

"It's a great opportunity because students take what they learn in classes like anthropology into practice," Wu said.

the wall?" Griffin asked. "Anything that I can do to break down intolerance, I'm always available to do that."

The purpose of the event was to raise awareness that hatred is common but unacceptable. "The more we know about intolerance, the more we can recognize it, talk about it and to get people who do these kinds of things," Griffin said.

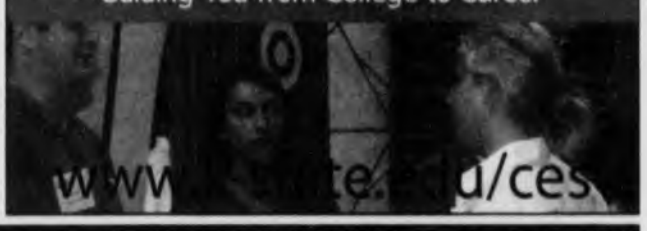
Many times people who use offensive words don't realize others might find their words offensive, Eargle said

"I think there's still not a good sense of what is right and wrong campuswide," Eargle said.

Dani Shanahan, treasurer of Progressive Alliance, a student organization that promotes lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender/transsexual related issues and affirmative action, stressed that the event is more symbolic and students should take actual action to end hate.

"Symbolically we're tearing it down, ripping down all the words and people can get the idea that these words are bad and we need to rid ourselves of them," said Shanahan, sophomore in open option.

Many resident assistants Ropes were tied to the wall and members of the audience grabbed different ropes as they pulled to destroy the wall of discrimination.



"If we are going to survive as people then we must come together, respect one another and treat each other with dignity," Griffin said.

Icing on the cake

Baker shares joys of fulfilling wedding dreams

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Janice Hill started her own cake business 30 years ago, and she said she has been enjoying it ever since. She owns and operates Vern's Wedding Cake Shop.

"This is a job I really enjoy," Hill said. "I love going to work. Every day is different."

She said it all started when her husband was watching TV in the evenings and she would go to her bakeshop and make a cake, usually until 2:30 in the morning. Then her husband would come out and get her to go to bed.

After a decade of designing cakes, Hill's husband entered her in the 1988 International Cake Explorers Contest. It was her first time in the contest, and her cake was chosen as the top foreign techniques wedding cake. She said she was shocked when she won.

Photos by Joslyn Borwn | COLLEGIAN

Janice Hill attended the Flint Hills Bridal Show in Junction City on Jan. 27. She has been making cakes professionally for 30 years. Hill's family has been supportive and helpful in her business, Vern's Wedding Cake Shop.

"Other than my marriage and children, it was the highlight of my life," she said.

International Cake Exploration Societe is a group of professionals who explore every aspect of cakes. Hill said they "get to know the cake inside and out and work in harmony with it." There is one award given for each of the 12 categories, she said.

The international competition was held in Tulsa, Okla., that year and professionals from all over the world competed, she said. There were so many cakes, Hill said, that it took the judges one week to evaluate them.

"There were phenomenal cakes–I had never seen so much talent in one room," she said.

Hill used a Filipino-style technique on her cake when she won the competition, and she said she has learned other techniques to accommodate her clients. The Filipino technique is difficult because roses that are as small as the end of a fingertip are made on wires. Usually Filipino cakes are fruitcakes, but she had to make a dummy cake out of Styrofoam.

"It is harder to make a dummy cake than a real cake," she said. "A dummy cake is light and moves around on you. It is easier to make a real cake, but you can't for competition because it has to be there for a week."

Hill has studied the English technique because of requests from Fort Riley soldiers and K-State students, and the Australian technique. She said she likes to get to know her clients so she can make a more personalized cake and give them exactly what they want for their special occasion.

"I have one shot at making this wedding dream come true, and I have to get it right the first time," she said.

In addition to decorating cakes, Hill said she enjoys teaching others her knowledge. She said she has taught classes at the American Baking Institute for several years.

Some of her tips include not putting flour on the bottom of the cake pan because it allows the cake to stick to the bottom of the pan.

She said to use margarine instead. Hill said she doesn't use Crisco in icing because it is a frying compound. She said she uses PS-99, an ideal shortening for frosting.

Hill said she enjoys learning and studying about her cakes more than any other activity.

"It is an addiction; the more you learn the more you want to learn," she said. "My husband says 'You just crawl into that cake don't you.'"

An example of this is her frosting recipe.

"Start with a recipe, and if you don't like it, tear it apart and redo it," she said. "I worked seven years on my icing–it is a ridiculous amount of time, but I did it to get it right."

Hill said she knows she got it right when photographers come by and compliment her cakes. She said the cake has to pass her standards and then 300 other peoples' standards. Working with professionals is easy, she said, because they don't make mistakes.

Along with Hill's professional life, she has raised four children, who have helped her in the cake business throughout the years with their own expertise from bookkeeping to making deliveries.

TRENDS THROUGH THE DECADES

Tubular, dude

Music heavily influences fashion, hairstyles of 1980s

BROOKE SHIELDS

MADONNA

JOURNEY

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 1980s were an era of rock music, big hair and bright colors. Most college students were born in this decade, and its popular culture influences remain after 20 years.

MUSIC

Prior to the 1980s, musical recordings came on vinyl records, 8-tracks and cassette tapes. The invention of the CD in 1982 served as one of the most significant changes in music production, said Craig Parker, associate professor of music history and music.

Though MTV plays a limited selection of music videos today, the cable TV network created change in popular music when it was introduced Aug. 1, 1981.

"A lot of people started buying the music based on how well they liked the music video rather than how they liked the actual music," Parker said.

MTV also led to the popularity of musicians like Madonna and Michael Jackson, Parker said. After Madonna's debut performance in 1982, MTV helped her career. Madonna has maintained her popularity for more than 25 years with more than 200 million records sold worldwide, and she led the list of 2008 inductees into the Rock and Hall Hall of Fame.

In 1982, Michael Jackson released his sixth solo album, "Thriller," which is the best-selling album of all time. The "Thriller" album and Jackson's "Off the Wall" album were among the 2008 inductees into the Grammy Hall of Fame.

"Michael Jackson became probably a billionaire for his work in the 1980s," Parker said. "Before he became a weirdo, he made some really wise investments."

Journey, an American rock band that formed in the early 1970s, saw commercial success during the 1980s with its power ballads like "Don't Stop Believin'." A jukebox played 1981's "Don't Stop Believin'" during the series finale of "The Sopranos" in June 2007, and the song hit the Top 10 list of iTunes' downloads that summer.

"It's heavy, very heavy," said Journey's founding guitarist Neal Schon in a June 11, 2007, MTV.com article. "It's one of those feel-good songs that's not going to go away."

The English rock band Pink Floyd also released the film "Pink Floyd The Wall" in 1982 based on its 1979 album "The Wall." Some people consider the film as "the world's longest rock video," Parker said.

"That became one of the favorite videos for stoners to watch in the 1980s," he said.

"One Shining Moment," a song David Barrett wrote about the men's college basketball championship, also gained popularity in the 1980s, Parker said.

The song has been played at the end of the NCAA Division I men's basketball tournament since 1987.

"The basketball season isn't over until they play 'One Shining Moment' at the end of the championship game next Monday night," Parker said.

FASHION AND STYLE

Punk rock and metal music served as a significant influence for 1980s fashion and style, said Deb Brosdahl, associate professor of apparel and textiles. The Bee Gees, Michael Jackson, Madonna, Annie Lennox and Boy George were all considered fashion icons.

TV shows that influenced fashion styles included "Charlie's Angels," "Dallas," "Miami Vice" and "Dynasty," Brosdahl said. Classic preppy styles also were influential during the early 1980s with tweed blazers, conservative skirts and blouses with ties, Brosdahl said.

Yuppies, or young urban professionals, wore high-status possessions like Rolodex watches and power suits, Brosdahl said. Italian designer Giorgio Armani had a significant influence with structured power suits that incorporated pin strips, she said.

Deluxe fibers for handbags in golds and silvers also remain popular today, Brosdahl said.

Brosdahl said the inner-city youth look, which was part of the hip-hop style and African-American culture, also was popular with its dreadlocks and kente cloth, which is a fabric of interwoven cloth strips.

In sportswear, stretch fabrics, tennis shoes and spandex gained popularity in the 1980s and remain popular today, Brosdahl said.

Luxury accessories like big necklaces and earrings also remain popular today.

"That's a way to express luxury," she said. "It's a form of communication about who the person is."

HAIR AND MAKEUP

Dorothy Hamill, an American figure skater, influenced women's hairstyles in the early 1980s with her short bob, wedge hairstyle, said Wida Egan, clinic floor supervisor for Crum's Beauty College.

GAMING

Movies, games don't converge well

BRANDON STEINERT

"Mario," "Doom," "Hitman" and "Superman" were all flops, but not on their original platforms. Movies and video games are two forms of audiovisual entertainment that should never be mixed, but nevertheless find themselves as awkward bedfellows all too often.

When video games undergo the transformation into movies, the story line, characters and conflicts all get skewed. "Doom," for example, was one flop starring The Rock that completely altered a story line to make the movie version more interesting to an audience that probably would have appreciated a more direct retelling.

Instead of locating a gate to hell on Mars, the rescue team found a large laboratory. The lab was previously occupied by humans, but they were transformed into horrible monsters when exposed to a superhuman enhancement drug that has different effects depending on how good of a person someone is when the drug is taken.

There are countless examples of bad movies spawned from games. Equally as bad are the movies made into games. So many of these are released with only one goal, to make more money from a well-known name.

One sad example is "The Dukes of Hazzard." While not much was expected from a video game based on a comedy, the game was still terrible beyond expectations. It would seem that somebody threw it together in a month and released it.

There are a few shining examples, like all three parts of the Spiderman franchise, but they are few and far between.

Games should stay games, and movies should stay movies.

MOVIE REVIEW

War film doesn't exploit soldiers like others

"Stop-Loss"

Review by Brendan Praeger

Making a film that focuses on the controversy surrounding the Iraq War has been a risky business decision in the past couple of years. "Lions for Lambs" and "Rendition" are examples of movies that failed to turn relevancy into critical or commercial success.

After a dismal, $4.56 million opening weekend for "Stop-Loss," it would seem the trend continues.

That's too bad. "Stop-Loss," despite its flaws, doesn't cash in on controversy or exploit soldiers for an easy emotional response.

The movie begins in Iraq with a group of soldiers following a car full of gunmen into an urban ambush. It conjures an emotional response that most action scenes never even dream of. Even though the film hasn't properly introduced most of the main characters, we know they're a family, and we know that each casualty affects the rest of the unit.

When the soldiers return home, they find it hard to leave the war behind. They have trouble telling their families what they've been through during the war and picking up old relationships where they left off. When one of the soldiers, Brandon King (Ryan Phillippe) finds out he's been "stop-lossed," a term referring to an involuntary extension of a soldier's contract, he decides to fight back rather than return to Iraq.

Unfortunately, it isn't as simple as leaving the base. When King becomes a fugitive, he decides to flee for Canada, though leaving his fellow soldiers behind proves difficult.

The story also focuses on Tommy Burgess (Joseph Gordon-Levitt), a soldier whose bad behavior compromises his military career. Gordon-Levitt nails a role that could have easily been mishandled and provides extra emotional depth to a film that moves dangerously slow at multiple points.

CURTOSEY PHOTO

"Stop-Loss" could have easily gotten carried away with its political message, but director Kimberly Peirce ("Boys Don't Cry") keeps the focus on the characters rather than politics. We feel their frustration when their lives spin out of control, and the film's power rests in its ability to make the story feel real, rather than a political anecdote or soulless statistic like so many other movies from this genre.

HANSEN

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Investigative reporter for Dateline NBC and the correspondent for Dateline's "To Catch a Predator" Chris Hansen will visit K-State next week.

Hansen will speak at 8:30 p.m. on April 16 in the Grand Ballroom of the K-State Student Union.

In the program, "To Catch a Predator," Hansen uses decoys and hidden cameras to catch and arrest would-be sexual predators who think they are meeting up with a young boy or girl, usually for sex. The individuals make contact online with decoys who claim to be a preteen or teenage child.

Hansen joined NBC in 1993 as a correspondent for "Now with Tom Brokaw and Katie Couric." Hansen began his work with "Predator" in September 2004 and expanded the franchise to include "To Catch an ID Thief" in April 2007.

Hansen graduated from Michigan State University with bachelor's degree from the College of Communication Arts and Sciences.

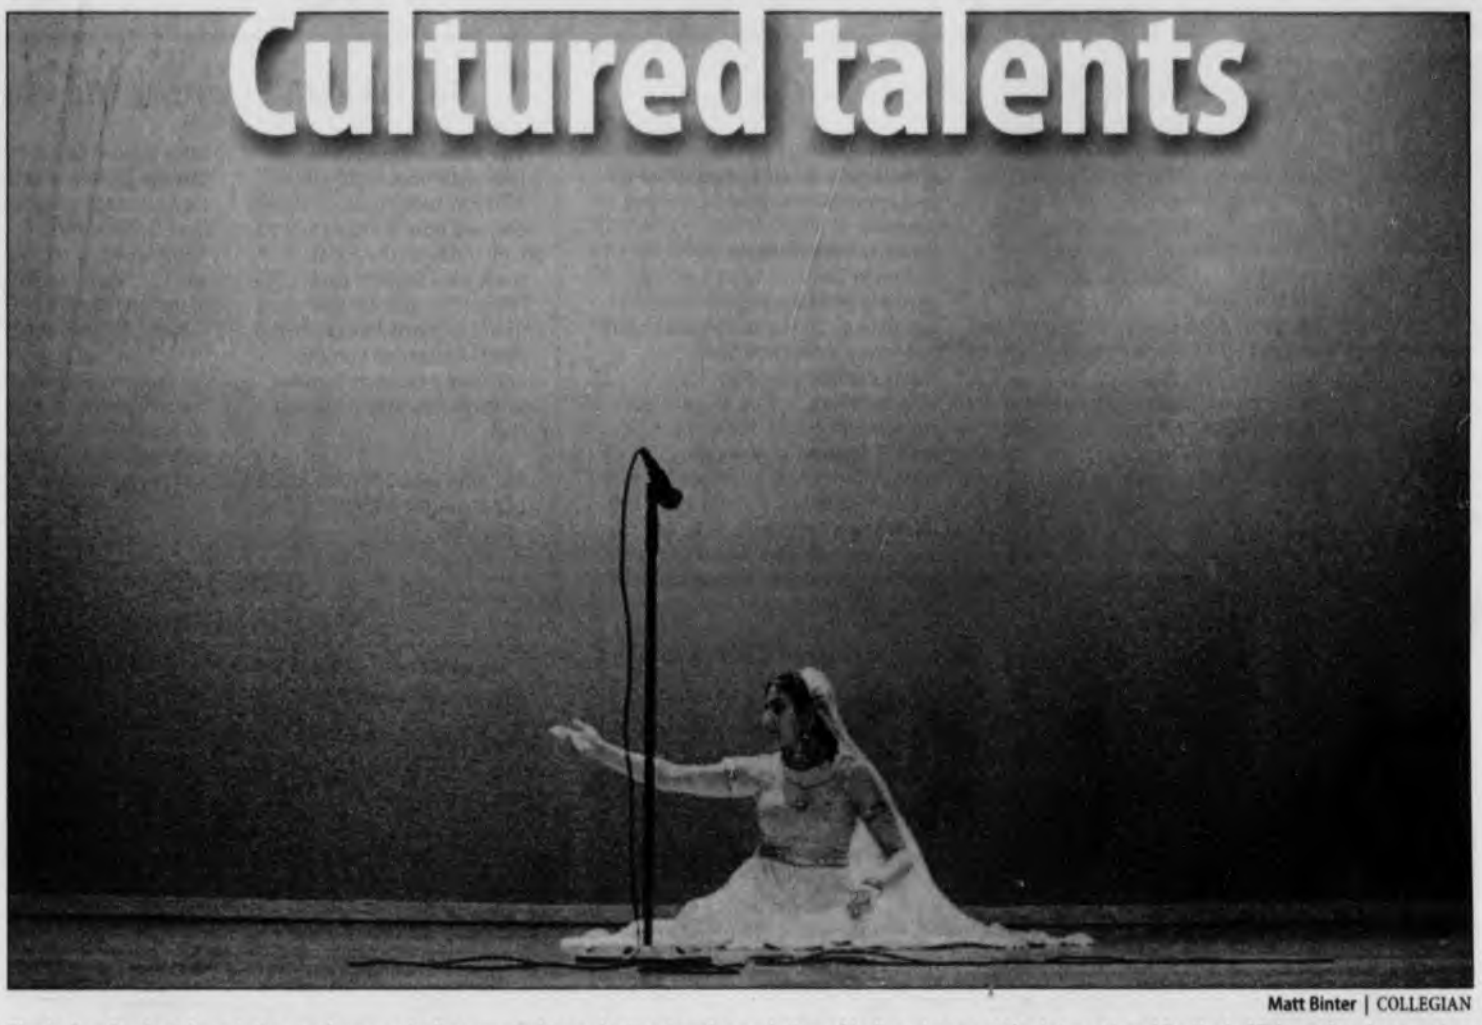
K-State hires Krause to be new AD

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State won't be importing a new athletic director from a far away location. K-State President Jon Wefald announced Friday the hiring of Bob Krause, K-State vice president for institutional advancement, as the new leader of the athletics department.

Krause, who has been at the university since 1986, was the overseer of the athletics department after Tim Weiser resigned in February to become the deputy commissioner of the Big 12 Conference. Krause will continue to oversee the department with Jim Epps, who was named deputy athletic director. Epps will oversee the daily operations of the department.

KRAUSE



Wefald said in a teleconference Friday the decision came after there was support for Krause in the athletics department, according to an article in the Wichita Eagle. The Eagle reported his expected contract to be five years. His base salary is $210,000 and should increase $15,000 per year.

In a prior interview with the Collegian, Krause said those involved in the hiring decision were waiting until the end of basketball season to fully concentrate on the search. They were planning on using national search firms, which deal with directors at the Division I-A level.

In an interview with the Manhattan Mercury, Krause said before the decision was made that he was interested in the position.

INTERNATIONAL WEEK

Cultured talents

The Indian Student Association performs an Indian group dance showcasing the evolution of Indian cinema at the International Festival of Talents Sunday evening in McCain Auditorium.

'Festival' starts week of International events

With the crackling melody of Mozart as his only accompaniment, Jinda Han, a freshman in computer engineering, belted out lyrics to the opera "Figaro's Marriage" like a bona-fide Italian at the International Festival of Talents Sunday night in McCain Auditorium. Just by listening to his voice, one would never guess Han is Japanese.

The rest of the talent show's singers and dancers made the most of a bare stage, performing traditional pieces from 10 different countries for an audience of about 250 people. The Festival of Talents marked the beginning of International Week at K-State.

"This is the 20th year of showcasing the many different cultures at K-State," said Lenka Hadamova, president of the International Coordinating Council. "It's a great experience."

The ICC presented the talent show as a way of piquing students' interest in learning about different cultures. The performances provided the audience with authentic images of foreign cultures.

The Indian Student Association drew lots of cheers with group dances showcasing the evolution of Bollywood. Ranjit Godavarthy, graduate student in transportation engineering, performed a personal piece that combined modern music with several decades of dance moves, including the moonwalk, popularized by pop star Michael Jackson in the '80s.

"It's great to perform for people from different countries," Godavarthy said. "I was very excited about this event because it was a opportunity to do that."

The Philippine Student Association members lit up the stage while balancing candles on their heads and swinging them from their hands during a performance of "Pandanggo Oasiwas." Later, they recreated a combat training dance called "Sakuting" that included sticks and simulated fighting.

Legislation to give FDA authority over tobacco

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Legislation to grant the Federal Drug Administration authority over tobacco product regulation has moved to the U.S. House of Representatives. The House Energy and Commerce Committee passed the bill, which has bipartisan support.

According to a Wednesday article by the Media General News Service, the legislation would give the FDA control over nicotine levels, cigarette marketing and health-warning labels, proposals that have been in Congress for more than a decade.

The bill would reinstate the FDA's 1996 rule that restricted tobacco marketing and sales to youth. According to a release by the Energy and Commerce Committee, the legislation would give the FDA the authority and resources to control regulation of tobacco products.

"The legislation provides FDA with resources necessary to fulfill its new responsibilities by requiring manufacturers and importers of tobacco to pay user fees to fund FDA's new regulatory responsibilities under the bill," according to the release.

According to the committee's Web site, the bill has more than 600 organizations supporting it.

Ryan Willcott, president of College Republicans, said there are parts of the legislation he likes, like the push to lower the levels of nicotine to help with addiction. He also said he likes that the government would be able to rid any appeals that cigarettes have to children, and he agrees with increasing the size of the surgeon general's warning on packaging.

"I think that everyone that smokes knows the risks, but there still may be some things that people need to know," he said.

While Willcott said he agreed with several parts of the proposed legislation, he said he doesn't think the tobacco industry should lose all of its freedom.

"I think the FDA should have the authority to regulate it to a point," he said, "but also it is an industry and it should not be completely controlled."

Liz Montaño, communications director for Rep. Nancy Boyda, D-Kan., said Boyda supports the bill, though she is concerned that the FDA's regulation of tobacco could seem like its endorsement of the product.

"Representative Boyda has some concerns how people will take that bill," Montaño said. "She doesn't want it to end up like a government seal of approval."

Fraternity restores K-State Challenge Course to pre-ice storm condition

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Paul Kauffman, junior in marketing, works on the highest-elements portion of the challenge course Saturday. K-State's challenge course has existed since June 2007.

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Challenge Course offers students, faculty, staff and the Manhattan community a fun way to develop team-building skills and stronger personal connections. But with the ice storm ripping through the city last December, fallen trees and branches rendered the course useless. If it had not been for Sigma Pi fraternity, the challenge course might not have been ready for its busy spring season.

BROTHERLY WORK

Jason Orr, junior in chemical engineering and Sigma Pi service chairman, said he talked to various officials in December and January looking for a campus and community project for his fraternity's semester philanthropy, Altruistic Campus Experience. He said ACE is a national Sigma Pi philanthropy designed to directly give back to the chapter's institution and community. So when he spoke with members of K-State's New Student Services about cleaning up the Challenge Course, he said he knew it would be a great opportunity.

"It was cold, but not back-breaking, hard work," said Tyler Cowley, Sigma Pi president and junior in sociology. "It didn't take very long – just a couple of hours – and we got out there and just cleaned it up, made it look pretty good, and helped out the grounds staff."

Emily Lehning, assistant dean for New Student Services, said when she heard the fraternity was willing to help with clean-up efforts, it was like lifting a weight off her shoulders.

"We have a small staff, and they would have, I'm sure, gladly

THIS WEEK

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1994: CIVIL WAR ERUPTS IN RWANDA

Rwandan armed forces killed10 Belgian peacekeeping officers in a successful effort to discourage international intervention in the genocide that had begun only hours earlier. In about three months, the Hutu extremists who controlled Rwanda brutally murdered an estimated 500,000 to 1 million innocent civilian Tutsis and moderate Hutus in the worst episode of ethnic genocide since World War II.

TUESDAY 1994: NIRVANA FRONTMAN DIES

Nirvana's Kurt Cobain was found dead at age 27. Cobain, lead singer of the rock band Nirvana, was found dead three days after committing suicide in his Seattle home. His death started a world-wide outpouring of grief among millions of Nirvana fans. Cobain's "grunge" band transformed rock music in the early 1990s and, though he did not accept the title, Cobain himself was considered the spokesperson for "Generation X." Cobain grew up in the small logging town of Aberdeen, Wa.

WEDNESDAY 1865: GEN. ROBERT E. LEE SURRENDERS

At Appomattox, Va., Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered his 28,000 troops to Union Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, effectively ending the American Civil War.

Forced to abandon the Confederate capital of Richmond, blocked from joining the surviving Confederate force in North Carolina, and harassed constantly by Union cavalry, Lee had no other option but to surrender.

THURSDAY 2005: TIGER WOODS WINS 4TH MASTERS

Tiger Woods won his fourth Masters Golf Tournament at Augusta National Golf Club after a 15-foot birdie on the first hole of the sudden-death playoff against Chris DiMarco on April 10, 2005.

The victory was Woods' ninth major championship on the PGA tour.

FRIDAY 1970: BEATLES SONG HITS NO. 1 JUST PRIOR TO GROUP DISBANDING

The Beatles' "Let It Be" hit No. 1 on the pop charts. The song had broken records by debuting at No. 6 on the charts in March. The day before the song hit the top position, band member Paul McCartney formally announced the group's breakup.

Week-long blood drive starts today

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students, faculty and staff have the opportunity this week to save a life by giving the gift of life – blood.

The American Red Cross will be on campus today through Friday accepting blood donations. The agency has requested that donors drink and eat plenty before donating blood.

Females in particular should get plenty of iron -rich foods like red meat, spinach, dried fruits and plenty of vitamin C to help absorb any iron they take in. Students should try to avoid coffee and tea as these can block the absorption of iron.

Students must have a photo ID in order to be able to donate. Donors will receive a free Bleed Purple T-Shirt and be able to draw to win prizes from Pizza Hut, Chipotle, Target and McAlister's Deli.

FACTS ABOUT DONATING BLOOD:

— In the U.S., someone needs blood every two seconds.

— A single blood donation can go to help save the lives of three separate hospital patients.

— About 37 percent of the population is eligible to donate blood. Of those eligible, only a small percent actually give.

Car, equipment stolen over weekend

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was arrested on Thursday and charged with stealing a car from a dealership, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

Jesse Avalos was charged with stealing a vehicle from Little Apple Toyota Honda, 2828 Amherst Ave. He was also charged with making false writing, according to the report. Both counts occurred on Jan. 11 and Jan. 23.

Avalos allegedly signed paperwork to buy the vehicle and "falsely stated and misrepresented material matter" within the paperwork, according to the report. He allegedly took the car after promising to return with cash, but did not return to the dealership.

The car was worth $28,346, and his bond for theft was set at $6,500, according to the report.

Also according to RCPD, equipment worth a total of $1,922 was stolen from Atwood Rental, 1927 Fort Riley Blvd.

According to the police report, an electric hammer, extension cord and 2800 Robin generator were all rented on March 11.

They were not returned as of Thursday.

OPINION

HIT OR MISS | The editorial board selects Hit or Miss topics and writes them after a majority vote. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

HIT | RELAY FOR LIFE AND BLOOD DRIVE
Relay for Life and the blood drive at the K-State Student Union will be this week. Students should take the opportunity to donate their time, energy or blood for the health of another person.

MISS | THEFT ON CAMPUS
There seems to be more theft occurring on campus, especially in the residence halls. Locking your door or securing your bike when you go to class is not hard or expensive. Though K-State is a friendly campus, students should be cautious about their possessions.

HIT | INTERNATIONAL WEEK
K-State's international community will offer several opportunities to learn about various cultures this week. The activities include a movie festival, a fashion show and dance lessons, so students should be able to find an activity that interests them.

HIT | MOVING CLASS OUTSIDE
With the spring weather finally making its way to Kansas, professors should consider having class outside on the lawn. We're approaching that time of the semester when students need to shake their routines up a bit.

MISS | iSIS ISSUES
While the new iSIS program has surpassed KATS in several categories, it still has a few kinks to work out. For example, several students have experienced difficulties when waitlisting for classes.

HIT | 'THE OFFICE' RETURNS
After months of awaiting the return of one of TV's most popular shows, fans will finally get to watch a new episode of "The Office" Thursday. This week, Pam and Jim are forced to go to dinner at Jan and Michael's place.

Parents should closely monitor vulgarities shared on 'Xbox Live'

AUBREE CASPER

Down the wing of any K-State residence hall, it's quite common to see a few guys hunched over a television, thumbing infamous white Xbox 360 controllers and yelling into microphone headsets.

The virtual world of gun battles and the real world of obscene discussions during games like "Halo 3" and "Call of Duty 4" are combining and getting out of control. The root of this is the latest fad in gaming, Xbox Live. Xbox Live is a way for video gamers to talk to other players live during rounds of Xbox 360 games, using a cable internet connection, set of headphones and a screen name.

Xbox 360 games are now being marketed to more pre-teen (ages 10-13) gamers, and the same members of this demographic are also becoming easy targets for older players on Live as their high-pitched voices give away their ages. The cursing and trash talking between adult players is offensive enough, but young children seem to inspire even more colorful exchanges. I have observed players numerous times who find humor in throwing around every four-letter word in the English language or pretending to be homosexual to tease kids and spark conversations they are nowhere near old enough to hear.

With no Federal Communications Commission control, talk on Xbox Live is an anything-goes form of communication. Though Xbox offers steps to avoid offensive players, young children aren't going to stand up to intimidators, making the Live part of Xbox 360 more harmful to children than the games themselves and not many parents have caught on to this new front of harmful media.

Microsoft – the creator of the Xbox gaming system – recently released a survey on their Web site that said 75 percent of parents are concerned about the content of the games, but nothing was said about the content of Xbox Live.

The article also said that in December 2007, Microsoft added parental controls to Xbox 360 allowing parents to limit the amount of time their kids play and log and control what games they are playing. Again, nothing about Live. After searching online, parents aren't given a heads-up - even on parenting blogs where games are discussed - about this new danger their children face while playing games that might be rated "E" for "Everyone" with Xbox Live conversations that need to be rated "M" for "Mature".

Many of the images and concepts of video games are inappropriate and the rating system should be an integral part of safety for the 38 percent of U.S. parents who allow their children to have in-home gaming systems. This should be a large part of the decision when selecting age-appropriate games for children. However, imagine the most distasteful and insulting words and topics that one could discuss.

Now, multiply that by ten, and you're on your way to understanding how awful many Xbox Live conversations have become. Microsoft's Web site said, "parents have the choice … to exercise their power to control what their children play." The problem now is they aren't aware of their ability to control what their children hear. A young player is more likely to imitate the older boys they might look up to than the shoot-'em-up games being played anyways.

Xbox.com does offer ways to avoid offensive players by muting them, blocking them and allowing parents to determine who their children are chatting with on Xbox Live, but again, most parents aren't aware of the problem, and no matter whom you block or mute, another loser will come along ready to corrupt the minds of younger children.

Andrew Krier, freshman in secondary education, utilizes the Live feature in the same manner as most college students. Krier addressed another potential concern that most unaffected students would fail to consider. "It's the parents' fault for letting their kids that young of age get on with 25, 40 and 50-year-old pedophiles," Krier said. He said he believes online-gaming chat rooms like Xbox Live could be the next avenue for child predators to lure young children into dangerous situations, and could evolve into a bigger problem than the game content and extensive cussing, as he experiences every time he logs on.

Christina Forsberg
COLLEGIAN

While the violence, sexuality and gore of virtual games give parents a reason to be wary of videogames, they fail to see that the reality in a virtual world might be more harmful to their children.

40th anniversary of King's death reminder of dream's price

BLAKE OSBORN

I can remember when I first heard a recording of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. deliver his "I Have a Dream" speech on Aug. 28, 1963. The sound of his voice kept me on edge with the passion and fury conveyed in his words. There was something haunting in his voice, as if the martyr could sense his own fate.

Five years later, on April 4, 1968, while King was standing on the balcony of the Lorraine Hotel in Memphis, he was shot and quickly rushed to the hospital. Later he died of a gunshot wound to the neck.

Friday was the 40th anniversary of his death, and it is important to realize how epic his human journey was.

In a brief span of 39 years, King certainly had his demons to fight and his angels to bring him glory. Michael Eric Dyson, professor of sociology at Georgetown University, in his book "April 4, 1968: Martin Luther King Jr.'s Death and How it Changed America," said King battled fierce periods of depression that at times concerned his aides. One aide recommended he visit a psychiatrist. He tried sleeping pills, but they stopped working, and on vacations he struggled to forget his anxieties.

Such is the life of a man on fire. While King burned with energy in his lifetime, death became somewhat of an obsession for him. He had few people he could talk to about his fear. As much as this fear must have disillusioned King, it is admirable that he did not let fear hold him captive and paralyze his dreams. His will to never give up should be an encouragement to all.

According to the March 27 issue of Time magazine, before his death, King said to his colleagues, "Like anybody, I would like to live a long life. Longevity has its place." Instead of aspiring for a long life, away from danger, King stated "I'd rather be dead than afraid."

King's will to fight should show us the power of a life lived with purpose. Young and restless as we all are, there is much we can learn from King.

In an interview in Thursday's issue of Newsweek magazine, professor Dyson remembers when he was 8 years old and learned of King's assassination.

"I was riveted by the report and was instantly converted and decided, beyond my conscious mind, to have a lifelong association with this man," Dyson said in the article.

What Dyson admires so much about King is his will to rise up as an ordinary citizen and make a difference.

"King was a private citizen who became a spokesman for a group of American people who had been neglected and marginalized," Dyson said. "[He] leveraged that moral authority to make real change in this country."

Dyson pointed out that today there would be no Barack Obama without King. He gave us "a language for our aspirations," Dyson said. "He re-imagined a new America of black, white and brown and red, together."

This notion of collectivity was also addressed recently by Archbishop Desmond Tutu. Brad Pitt interviewed him for the July issue of Vanity Fair magazine.

In the interview, Tutu used the word "ubuntu", coming from the Bantu languages of Southern Africa, which, according to Tutu, evokes the inter connectedness of each human being.

"We say a person is a person through other persons," Tutu said. "You can't be human in isolation. You are human only in relationships."

Ubuntu taps into the dream King had for his children, for America and for the world. In a speech on March 22, 1964, King said, "We must learn to live together as brothers or perish together as fools."

He knew and demonstrated the power of collective action.

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

What King can showed us is the burden that comes with being a harbinger of hope and change. His life is an example for all of the weight of glory, and how tumultuous the road to the future is, especially when traveled by human feet.

If she lost 20 pounds, I would.

Girls are stupid.

This is the tall, blond, shaggy-haired guy in front of the library with the red hat, and the Ugg boots aren't going anywhere. So suck it.

You know it's way too hot in Eisenhower 15 when the projector says "You need to cool down the room because the projector is overheating."

It's cold as balls out here.

Is this Pizza Shuttle? Oh, OK. I'd like to order four pepperoni pizza with extra dipping sauce. Also, don't forget the cheese and peppers.

Yeah, I was just looking at the MLB standings and noticed that the Kansas City Royals were the only undefeated team in the first week, and I'm just shocked and amazed that they are the best so far.

Do guys think it's a turn-on when you list all of your legal offenses on the first date?

I'm a girl who likes bad boys, but not the bad boys who has a longer wrap sheet than Snoop Dogg.

To all the people in the library who use those computers to check Facebook and their e-mail: go somewhere else. People actually have work to do there.

I just saved $28 at Dillons. I love you, Dillons.

I just found Michael Beasley's parking ticket on the ground. What's new?

Have you seen my sleep?

The Royals swept the Tigers. School's canceled next week.

Justin Nutter: Your Royals' article rocked, and you're freaking gorgeous. Call me.

To the guy and girl that were making out on the lawn in front of Anderson Hall: chiggers are about ready to come out, so watch out.

My roommate just asked me to smell her finger.

When guys wear Ugg boots, they're called "Mugg boots."

Thanks, Derb. The dinner was delicious.

Attention Classy Cats: You're neither classy nor a cat.

Have you ever drank Bailey's from your shoe?

You're killing me, Smalls. Choose Patrick or Brian.

So like, I was eating eggs for breakfast, and isn't that like a chicken's period? Ew.

Dude, I'm totally impressed with the Riley County Police Department. They nabbed my roommate less than 24 hours after a warrant went out. Now time to catch the rapist.

Free tickets to Sara Evans' concert? Count me there.

So I guess they changed their minds on that whole 7-Eleven thing outside the dorms.

City officials worry proposed Discovery Center won't meet expectations

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The task for the proposed Flint Hills Discovery Center that will be a part of the southern Manhattan redevelopment project might appear a daunting one.

The museum, which has been an ongoing project for several years now, is projected to draw between 70,000-100,000 people per year – that is where City Commissioner Bob Strawn's cautious approach originates.

"I'm not against the [Center]; I have concerns about the merit," he said. "I will worry if it'll achieve what's expected out of it. Will it have merit and will Manhattan adapt and support it as a hallmark of the community? Will it be a tax strain? Will it draw what it's projected to? Somebody has to show me it has merit."

Proving the merit of the Center has been an ongoing task since the Kansas Department of Commerce approved $50 million in STAR (Sales Tax Revenue) bonds to the City of Manhattan in December 2006. According to the Department of Commerce's Web site, STAR bonds are provided to offer Kansas municipalities opportunities "... to issue bonds to finance the development of major commercial entertainment and tourism areas and use sales tax revenue generated by the development to pay off the bonds."

Of the soon-to-be allotted STAR bonds, $11 million will be set aside for construction, $3 million will go toward consultants and related fees, $12 million toward land acquisition, $3 million will go toward infrastructure and the final $11 million will account for accumulated interest on the bonds.

In an initial feasibility study by Canyon Research Southwest, Inc., a Tempe, Ariz., based company, the Flint Hills Discovery Center and the Downtown Manhattan Redevelopment District are forecasted to increase annual out-of-town visitation to the Manhattan area by 120,000 to 380,000 people. This influx of visitors will increase the demand for overnight accommodations by about 20,400 to 64,600 annual room nights. The money generated by out-of-town visitors is forecasted to account for about $50 million of the Downtown Manhattan Redevelopment District's annual retail sales. This information forms the basis of city commissioner Bruce Snead's support of the Discovery Center.

"I've been on the city commission throughout the downtown redevelopment project, and I've seen the interest folks have and the desire to increase tourism in the Flint Hills," he said. "The draw for nature-based tourism along with the location of Manhattan and the presence of K-State in the community all present itself as a natural choice along with the STAR bond acceptance."

Featured exhibits in the Discovery Center will include an aquarium, interactive exhibits in which students can experience the prairie and other exhibits that will be determined by a consultant's study, Strawn said. He also said an exhibit has been purchased from the Smithsonian Institution.

"It speaks to native prairie, though I have not seen it myself," he said.

The Center will employ eight full-time employees and 18 part-time employees. Operating costs are estimated to run from $600,000-$700,000. Twenty-five thousand people visit the Mariana Kistler Beach Museum of Art annually, said Martha Scott, business and marketing manager.

Abilene's Eisenhower Presidential Library and Museum is visited by an estimated 70,000 people every year, said Linda Smith, archive specialist for the museum and library.

Whether the center lives up to the claims of success that have accompanied it in preliminary studies is still up in the air. Lauren Ritterbush, associate professor in sociology, anthropology and social work, has served as a museum consultant in the past. She said she does not think the Center will be able to survive on its own.

COURTESY PHOTO

"My observations of museums indicate to me that museums are not self-sustaining. They require outside funding, lots of it and consistently," she said in an e-mail interview. "I am not aware of any funding sources for this museum beyond limited admissions and city funds, which must also be applied to many other things."

The city commission is accepting bids for consulting services to assist in the museum's development. The consulting service will help with exhibit and facility conceptual design. Proposals are due to the city by April 14.

Strawn said the consultant will likely come to K-State and inquire about aspects of the Center and whether or not it has merits.

Snead said he knows many people associated with K-State have knowledge of the prairie and the science that the attractions will portray; and he said he hopes they will provide their insight.

Strawn said if the consultants tell the commission that the Center does not have merit there will be "... a big argument and I will be standing on a chair, yelling lies."

But Snead said he has faith in the Discovery Center.

"There are big challenges with the project, but it is a unique opportunity to help revitalize downtown and the community," he said.

K-STATE SPORTS

Passion needed to handle AD job

WENDY HAUN

Bob Krause, who has an office in Anderson Hall and has been at K-State for 22 years, better bring his A game to his new position as athletic director.

Krause, who works closely with the athletics department as the vice president for institutional advancement, knows a lot about the image of the university.

It's been his job since 1986 to paint K-State in a positive light and keep it moving in the right direction, and one of the main components of that goal is to keep the athletics department on a forward path.

He's always had a hand in the athletics department. Now, he gets the chance to run it.

He won't be dealing with the daily operations; that job is Jim Epps'.

But he will have full power over the department overall.

In a prior interview with the Collegian, Krause said the plan was to utilize national searches to find an athletic director with experience in the field who knew what Division I-A athletics was all about.

Krause sure has the last part down.

He does know about Division I-A athletics, but is it enough?

It's definitely a big plus that Krause has been a Wildcat for so long and he understands what this university is all about.

Now it's time to bring the passion to the athletic director position.

It would be difficult to be extremely passionate in this position, but it's what K-State needs.

It needs to continue the excitement that has been brewing with the basketball programs. It needs to continue to get back on the right track in the football program.

With Kansas continuing its domination of basketball and suddenly finding its football program that has been missing for 20 years, the microscope is back on K-State to rise to the occasion and make the rivalry something exciting.

K-State has started to move in the right direction in many aspects, athletics-wise.

The men's basketball team had the winningest home season of any previous K-State team.

The K-State women's basketball team put together a run in the NCAA tournament which stopped short of the Sweet 16, despite losing their leading scorer.

The men's golf team has logged several top-5 finishes, including a win at the Ron Moore Invitational.

The track team has the stellar efforts of junior – and Olympic hopeful – Scott Sellers.

The Wildcat volleyball team is also preparing to travel to several spring tournaments, one of which is in China this May.

Men's basketball coach Frank Martin repeatedly said how proud he was of his team for staying the course during the season, bumps and all.

That's what K-State has to do right now: stay the course. Keep moving progressively forward. It can happen.

Hopefully Krause is the man to get us there.

TRACK AND FIELD

Reaching new heights

Junior Scott Sellers clears the bar during the high-jump competition. Sellers placed second at the Texas Relays with an Olympic A-standard jump of 7-06.5. Sellers finished second to Andra Mason, who was competing for Nike.

Track team grabs 4 top-10 finishes in Texas

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State notched four event victories and four top-10 victories this weekend in two separate relays in Texas and Kansas.

The Wildcats earned four top-10 finishes at the Texas Relays in Austin, Texas, and took four event victories at the Emporia State Relays in Emporia, Kan.

Junior Scott Sellers was the Wildcats' top finisher at the 81st-annual Texas Relays, as he took second place in the high jump. His jump of 7-06.50 is an Olympic A-standard. Sellers was the top collegiate jumper at the meet and was only topped by Andra Manson, who was competing for Nike and completed a jump 1.25 higher than Sellers. Seller's jump was his third highest since he's been competing for K-State and his best this season.

Junior Mike Myer ran to an eighth place finish in the 100-meter dash, with a time of 10.48. Myer would have earned a regional qualifying mark in the preliminaries when he posted a time of 10.41, but due to windy conditions which included a 4.9 meters per second gust, his result was ineligible for qualification.

The Wildcats also earned a top-10 finish in the women's 4x400-meter dash. The team of junior Lauren Fisher and seniors Donniece Parrish, Morgan Bonds and Marnyka Honeycutt raced to a fourth-place finish and posted a season-best time of 3:39.06. Only six teams in the nation have ran a faster 4x400-meter dash this season.

The squad of Parrish, Honeycutt, senior Candice Mills, and freshman Tiara Walpool earned a fifth-place finish in the women's 4x100-meter relay. They posed a time of 1:35.84. In the 4x200-meter relay the women did not make the finals, after finishing in 16th place in the preliminaries.

Most of the Wildcats were competing closer to home Sunday, with around 40 athletes participating in the Emporia State Relays.

The team had a particularly strong performance in the throwing events, winning four events. Sophomore Loren Groves won both the hammer throw and the discus. Her winning throw in the discus of 169-04 was her best of the season and the second best of her career. Her toss ranks in the top-15 throws in the nation, this season. She won the hammer throw with a toss of 204.11

Freshman Ali Pistora took the title in the women's javelin for the Wildcats. She finished with a throw of 164-00, which improves her previous personal best by 13 feet and moves her up the national rankings from 31st to seventh.

Sophomore Eric Thomas won the fourth throwing title for the Wildcats, and the only event victory for the men. He took first in the discus, unleashing a personal best throw of 170-01, beating his previous best throw by almost six feet. Thomas earned his first regional qualifying mark of the season with the throw.

The Wildcats will be split up again next week, as the team will send athletes to both the UTEP Invitational in El Paso, Texas, and the KT Woodman Invitational in Wichita.

Cats lose two matches by 5-2 margins

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team notched two losses this weekend to Texas Tech and the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 4-ranked Baylor, each by 5-2 margins.

Following the losses, the Wildcats fell to 6-10 and 2-5 in the conference, but the team is finding reason to be optimistic about what the final four regular-season matches will bring.

"There's not a whole lot of matches left, and the road doesn't get a whole lot easier," said coach Steve Bietau. "Playing at A&M and at Texas is tough, it's going to be right up there with playing these guys here [Baylor]. The road doesn't get any easier and we have four matches left before the tournament. If we can start playing better, we'll have our shots in some of those matches. Maybe [we'll] get into position to get someone into the tournament and do some damage there. We just want to get people playing well and have them ready to do what they're capable of."

In Friday's match against the Red Raiders, the Wildcats were able to record two singles wins, but Texas Tech took the doubles point and the win. Senior Viviana Yrureta took the No. 1 singles match by a 7-5, 6-3 score against Samantha van der Drift. Sophomore Natasha Vieira fought her way into the tie-breaker against Kerryn Potgieter and ended up victorious by a 6-3, 2-6, 10-7 margin.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Natasha Vieira volleys a shot during her singles match against Baylor Sunday. Vieira was defeated in singles, but her doubles team with senior Viviana Yrureta was the only doubles team to win on the day.

The doubles portion of the match featured a duel between the Raiders' Breanna Jackson and Potgieter and the Wildcats' freshmen duo of Antea Huljev and Vanessa Cottin. Jackson and Potgieter eventually won the match 9-8 (7-5). The other matches featured similar outcomes and were the root of Bietau's discontent with the level of play.

"Our doubles play in general wasn't very good; it didn't really set the tone that we wanted it to for the match," he said. "We're coming off of a match that we didn't play well, and I think for a variety of reasons we didn't play well anywhere in doubles. How

K-State freshman named to NABC All-America list

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

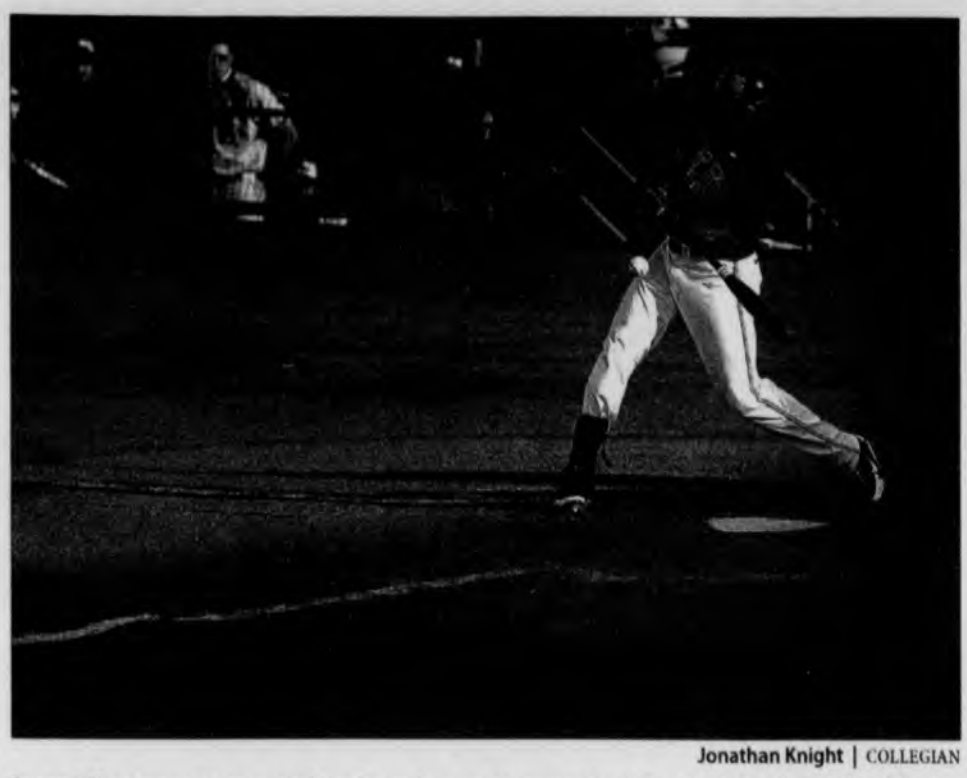
The National Association of Basketball Coaches honored Michael Beasley along with four others to its first team all-America status.

BEASLEY

Beasley was joined on the team by Texas' D.J. Augustin, Chris Douglas-Roberts of Memphis, Tyler Hansbrough of North Carolina and Luke Harangody from Notre Dame.

HANSBROUGH

The second team consisted of Indiana's Eric Gordon and D.J. White, Tennessee's Chris Lofton, UCLA's Kevin Love and Georgetown's Roy Hibbert, while Memphis' Derrick Rose, Kansas' Brandon Rush, Vanderbilt's Shan Foster, Stanford's Brook Lopez and Duke's DeMarcus Nelson composed the third team. The 15-member team was selected and voted on by the member coaches of the NABC.



Sunday, Hansbrough was named the Naismith Player of the Year, an award given out by the Atlanta Tipoff Club. The award is sponsored by AT&T and is the only national award that incorporates fan voting as 25 percent of the final tally.

The award was the last in a long line for Hansbrough, who has topped Beasley in the eyes of ESPN.com and the Associated Press. He was also the recipient of the Oscar Robertson award, which is handed out by the National Basketball Writers Association.

The Naismith trophy was first awarded to Lew Alcindor, who later changed his name to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who played for UCLA in 1969. The only remaining national player of the year award to be handed out is the Wooden Award, which will be given out Saturday at the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Wildcats fall to Aggies in weekend showdown

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

Byron Wiley connects on a pitch in the early evening game March 2 against the University of Central Alabama at Tointon Family Stadium. Texas A&M outscored K-State 34 to 14 in their 3-game series this weekend.

While pitching might have been K-State's theme last weekend, it certainly wasn't this weekend against Texas A&M in College Station, Texas. The Aggies swept the Wildcats by a combined score of 34 to 14.

Going into the weekend, K-State (15-15, 2-7 Big 12 Conference) had won eight of its last nine and had a series win against a ranked Oklahoma State squad last weekend.

Texas A&M (26-6, 9-3 Big 12) came into the weekend ranked No. 15 in the nation and on a six-game winning streak. The Aggies also had the third-rated offense in the Big 12 hitting for a .311 average.

FRIDAY: TEXAS A&M 7, K-STATE 2

K-State's ace pitcher had a day and a first inning to forget as the Aggies found a way to get to senior Brad Hutt in a 7-2 victory.

Hutt hit the first batter he faced, and it didn't get any better as he loaded the bases in the first inning. The Aggies' Darby Brown came up to the plate and hit a grand slam to give A&M a 4-0 lead in the first.

The Wildcats' bats didn't give Hutt much help by leaving six runners on base before getting on the scoreboard in the seventh inning. Junior Rob Vaughn led off the inning with a home run, leading to the Wildcats' first run.

But the game was out of reach with the Aggies scoring one run in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings, giving them seven runs off of six hits.

K-State added one more run in the ninth off of junior Byron Wiley's sacrifice fly to knock in senior Brett Scott. The Wildcats had one less hit in the whole game than the Aggies (7 to 8), but couldn't get the base runners around the bases.

Hutt was credited with the loss, moving him to 3-3 on the year and gave up seven runs in five and two-thirds innings of work – well higher than his 2.25 era this season.

SATURDAY: TEXAS A&M 13, K-STATE 8

K-State's bats woke up in the second game of the weekend, but Texas A&M's were more potent as the Aggies won 13-8 on Saturday.

It was low scoring in the first few innings as the Aggies scored one run in the second inning off of a sacrifice fly by Luke Anders to drive in Jose Duran, but in the fifth is when the Wildcat offense woke up.

K-State scored four runs in the fifth off of five hits. Rob Vaughn scored first off of an Adam Muenster single. After a lineout by junior Nate Tenbrink, sophomore Justin Bloxom stepped up to the plate and doubled with two strikes, driving in both Muenster and junior Jordan Cruz. The next batter, freshman Jason King, replicated Bloxom with a double, knocking in Bloxom to make the score 4-1 in favor of the Wildcats.

The next inning was almost as good for K-State as it scored three runs, including a solo home run by Vaughn and a two-run single by Bloxom, giving him four RBIs on the day.

The Wildcats took the 7-1 lead into the bottom of the sixth, but the Aggies responded with two runs in the sixth, seven runs in the seventh and three in the eighth.

In the seventh Texas A&M had a total of six hits going against five different K-State pitchers. The highlight of the Aggies scoring outburst was a three-run triple by Dane Carter.

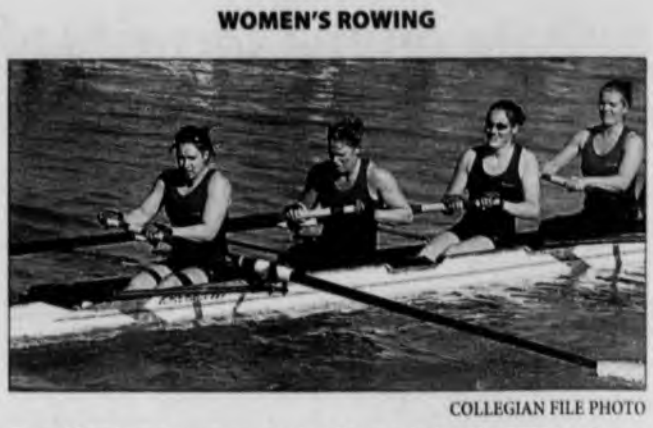
The loss was credited to Thomas Rooke (3-1). Rooke, a freshman, only pitched seven pitches.

SUNDAY: TEXAS A&M 14, K-STATE 4

Texas A&M's offense was still a juggernaut on Sunday, leading the Aggies to a 14-4 victory in an eight-inning game.

Junior Lance Hoge was the starting pitcher and gave up two runs in the first and one in the second, and the story stayed the same in the third.

In the bottom of the third, Texas A&M scored three runs off of five hits. The Aggies started off the inning with three singles, one that scored a runner. Then, coach Brad Hill brought in relief pitcher A.J. Morris. The sophomore gave up a two-run homerun to first batter he saw giving the home team the 6-1 advantage.



That put the game out of reach for the Wildcats as they were only able to score two runs in the fourth and one in the seventh.

The game ended on a two-run homerun by Texas A&M's Luke Anders that put the Aggies up 14-4, which ended the game because of the 10-run rule.

The two runs in the eighth followed up a seventh that had six runs scored against the Wildcats.

The Wildcats used a total of five pitchers with Hoge getting credited with the loss, moving him to 1-2 on the year. Hoge's last outing was a complete-game shutout against Oklahoma State last weekend.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 120 teams competed in the 35th-annual San Diego Crew Classic, with the Wildcats being one of the last six 8+ boats to qualify for the Grand Finale race.

The varsity and the novice boats both were able to finish high enough in the preliminary races for them to compete in their respective final races on Sunday.

The K-State varsity rowing boat came in second behind San Diego State in Heat B of the Women's Cal Cup Saturday, allowing it to participate in the finals. During the Grand Finale on Sunday, the Wildcats finished sixth in the race and finished sixth overall at the Crew Classic. This was the sixth time in the last eight years that the Wildcats participated in the Grand Finale.

The JV rowing boat placed fifth in Heat A of its race, which qualified the team to partake in the Petite Final on Sunday. The Wildcats placed second in the Petite Final behind Louisville, giving them an overall eighth-place finish at the competition.

Next up for the K-State rowing team will be the Kansas Cup on Saturday. The race between K-State and Kansas will take place at Wyandotte County Lake in Kansas City, Kan.

much of that carried over into the singles? I don't think a lot of it did, we played better in the singles than we did in the doubles. But did we play up to what we are capable of? I don't think so."

On Sunday, the Wildcats mounted an upset attempt against the highly ranked Bears, but came up short in two of the final three singles matches. The doubles play part of the match had the Wildcat duo of senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova keep the ITA's No. 2 doubles team of Zuzana Zemenova and Lenka Broosova close before eventually falling, 8-6.

A similar result occurred with Huljev and Cottin taking No. 57 Taylor Ormond and Jelena Stanivuk to the wire before losing 8-5. Yrureta and Vieira recorded a win over Jana Bielikova and Zuzana Chmelarova, 8-5.

A strong showing in doubles partially carried over into singles play where the Wildcats took two matches.

The singles line-up was shuffled following an injury to Cottin, so freshman Pauline Guemas stepped in at the No. 6 singles spot and won 6-4, 6-1. Huljev also was victorious over Ormond, who was injured in the second set of the No. 2 doubles match, but played on before retiring in the third set because of injury and losing 1-6, 6-1, 3-1.

The Wildcats are off until 6 p.m. Friday, when they will visit Texas A&M. Bietau said he was hopeful that changes in attitude would make for better efforts from each player.

"One of the things I said to them is when I looked around I didn't get the feeling that if a player changed her attitude, we'd be 30 percent better," he said. "Unfortunately, there's been some of that, so hopefully that's starting to disappear."

K-State online security officer spends free time playing guitar, backpacking

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The protector of our online information is not a superhero. He is an ordinary guy who has been at K-State for more than 30 years, and he works in an office surrounded by books and journals of information on technology security. But there is more to Harvard Townsend, including his sense of adventure.

INCREASE IN SECURITY

Townsend, K-State's IT security officer, works in all areas of online security. He is responsible for the policies and procedures, user awareness and handling incidents.

"Technology has infiltrated every aspect of the institution," he said. "The institution relies on it heavily. Everyone is connected in some way online, which means there is greater exposure of K-State's resources.

"All of your data about you as a student or me as an employee is online, and I can access it online, and there are people that know that's online and are looking for that."

Townsend said IT security has become more important lately, and more criminal activities are taking place online. Another part of his job is law enforcement and investigating incidents, like the recent e-mail scam that has taken a significant portion of his time.

He said the university already has had 200 incidents this year, with most of them relating to the scam. User awareness and education can help with these incidents.

"That's always, in security, one of the biggest challenges – to teach people about their responsibilities for security – because it's not just the domain of IT professionals," he said. "It must involve everybody. I can't use a technology to prevent you from replying to an e-mail with your password. You are the best defense in that regard."

Though his job constantly changes as he learns new areas of information, he said he likes the challenge because it keeps him from being bored.

SENSE OF ADVENTURE

This helps peak Townsend's love of adventure. He graduated from K-State with a bachelor's degree in wildlife biology to complement his love of the outdoors. He enjoys everything from running marathons to backpacking to mountain biking, which he said is one of the few activities he does that still scares him.

For his 25th wedding anniversary, he and his wife hiked the Colorado Trail from Denver to Durango, a 477-mile, 41-day backpacking trip.

"That was definitely a highlight of life," he said. A map of the trail along with a photo of him and his wife wearing backpacks hangs on his office wall.

"I've often said that the best thing about Kansas is that it's next to Colorado," he joked. "Seven hours and I can be to the mountains.

"But Manhattan's a great place to raise a family. This is where we've ended up, and I don't regret that at all."

CHANGE IN CAREER

Pictures of Townsend's three children also line his walls. His dedication to his family ultimately led to his eventual career in computing and information sciences. When he graduated from K-State, he was married and had his first child on the way. He had been accepted to a graduate program in rural Michigan, but after he and his wife thought about their long-term career plans, they did not think moving to Michigan was the best decision.

So, they stayed in Manhattan, and he started his graduate studies in CIS.

"It's been a great way to provide for my family," he said. "I believe it is God's direction, personally. The only background I had was a couple of graduate statistics classes I took in preparation for my advanced wildlife degree.

"At the time, it was a young profession in a relatively new curriculum. It was a real radical change in career paths, but I've definitely maintained my career interests as a hobby."

LIFE AT K-STATE

Townsend's wife is a biology faculty member and teaches Human Body. The two met through their love of biology, and during his last undergraduate semester at K-State, Townsend had her as a lab instructor.

"That was awkward," he said, laughing. The university allowed him to audit the class even though his wife was the instructor, but he said "she was hard."

Townsend said he enjoys meeting new people at K-State and appreciates the opportunities available.

"There are a variety of intellectual pursuits," he said. "That's true of any institution. That's why I like higher [education]. It's fascinating and stimulating, and I love to be a part of supporting those efforts to ultimately better the world."

Townsend's other interests include playing the guitar, reading historical biographies and spiritual books and playing sports like basketball and softball. He also is involved with his church. In fact, he and his wife became Christians while students at K-State.

Townsend's career path has taken many turns along the way. His first 13 years at K-State he worked as an assistant administrative supporter for IT, and he later worked for and also was the director of the computing and networking system.

He has worked as the IT security officer for two years, and he said he likes what he does. However, he said he doesn't think he'll have any trouble retiring when the time comes.

"I'll have plenty to do," he said, smiling. "I've got a life list of adventures. So many trips, so little time."

put in the time to help clean up the course and get it ready for spring," she said, "but to have the extra hands and bodies out there, making it happen quickly for us, it was definitely a huge relief."

Cowley said though he has not personally used the course, his fraternity has been invited by the K-State grounds crew to use it during a weekend in the future as a thank-you.

"We enjoyed [helping out] very much," he said. "It was a really good time to do that and help out, and we can really see our hard work paying off."

THE COURSE

The Challenge Course was completed in June 2007 and had been a dream of the university for a long time, Lehning said.

"There are several peer institutions that have challenge courses or rope courses as part of educational offerings," she said, "and we thought it would be a great way for our students to practice leadership and to develop skills for working in teams, and [we thought] it would also be great for our faculty, staff and community."

Lehning said she often had heard of groups wanting a challenge course experience, but the only courses available were outside the city.

"We thought it would be great to have one to call our own – one that would be accessible and convenient and sort of an extra educational part of what K-State has to offer students," she said

Paul Morton, recreation coordinator with the City of Manhattan, said the course is primarily used for group team building, whether it is people who work together, live together or groups of friends.

"It's a way to work on team-building and leadership skills," he said. "It's about pushing boundaries and getting people outside their comfort zones so people can push themselves a little bit physically and mentally."

The Challenge Course has three elements – a grassy field for group elements, designed to prepare one for the experience and a low course and a high course, both which involve ropes, cables, platforms and logs, according to the Challenge Course Web site.

Morton said reservations for the course are made through the office of New Student Services, and groups can choose from a half-day event – the low course – or a full-day event – the low and high courses.

He said anyone is welcome to walk through the courses at anytime, but trained student facilitators must be present when using the course equipment.

Lehning said depending on the size of the group – groups are classified as seven or more individuals – the office prefers a week advance notice for reservation requests.

"With students' schedules, sometimes that can be difficult," she said. "But we like to give [the facilitators] enough notice to be sure they're there and ready for the groups."

However, Lehning said the office tries to accommodate groups as much as possible. She said though some groups have already made reservations for August, she has taken reservations just a few days in advance.

'Spring Fling' interests students

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Each spring, K-State residence halls put together an activity for members of different dorms to have a good time and get to know each other. However, beginning in 1966 through the late 1980s, halls used to have a much anticipated, annual event for residents and members living in campus facilities not affiliated with the greek system. It was Spring Fling and a huge success before falling out of favor in the 1990s.

The following article is a staff report from the April 15, 1966, Collegian announcing the first Spring Fling at K-State.

WILDCAT AND KITTEN TO REIGN HALLS, INITIATE SPRING FLING

Though spring officially began March 20, K-State's own Spring Fling will begin Monday.

That date will mark the beginning of Spring Fling Week, being sponsored by the K-State Association of Residence Halls for independent students.

Spring Fling Week, a first here, will give 3,000 dorm residents and other independents a chance to "fling," said Mike Farmer, chairman of the week's activities.

A hootenanny in front of Boyd, Van Zile and Putnam at 4 Monday afternoon will initiate the week's activities. Candidates for "Wildcat" and "Wildkitten" will be presented during the hootenanny.

The elected Wildcat and Wildkitten will be announced at a leadership banquet in Kramer Food Center Tuesday. Featured banquet speakers will be Thomas Frith, assistant dean of students and Don Steeples, AGE Jr, president of KSUARH.

Caroline Peine, assistant dean of women, will speak on "Today's Women Tomorrow" at an Associated Women Students Symposium, at 7:30 p.m. Thursday.

Friday night, all women's dorms will provide music for dancing and refreshments.

Saturday's activities include games, balloon fights, tug of war, a hootenanny and a bed race.

The bed race will begin at 11 Saturday morning and will cover more than two miles. The six beds entered will match teams of four boys pushing decorated beds containing four girls each. Awards will be given to the first bed across the finish line and also to the most unique bed.

"Spring Fling Week" will end with a dance at Derby Food Center, 8:30 p.m. Saturday, with Eric and the Norsemen.

an edgy, foreign rendition of a square-dance, the Taiwanese Student Association danced to powerful female vocals while holding hands with one another to demonstrate the passionate spirit of traditional Taiwanese aborigines.

"Even though we don't know the language, the performers did a good job of conveying what they were trying to say," said Vikas Bahirwani, graduate student in computer science. "I knew that Indian culture was very colorful, but this showed me the exotic combination of music and dance that is prevalent in other cultures too."

TOBACCO | Boyda, Clean Air chair agree bill will save lives, money

Montaño read a letter that Boyda sent to a constituent concerning her opinion on the legislation.

Boyda said she signed the bill because she is worried about the toll tobacco products are taking on our society, including the lives lost and the money spent on health care in Kansas.

"The regulation of tobacco products will save lives and save money," Rep. Boyda wrote. "The FDA is the agency that has the most expertise in this area, so I have signed as a co-sponsor of this bill, and I will work to get it passed by the House of Representatives this year."

Charlene Brownson, chair of Clean Air Manhattan, said she thinks the regulation of tobacco products is long overdue. She has had family members die prematurely because of smoking cigarettes, so she thinks the legislation is important.

She also thinks that there needs to be a reduction of nicotine levels.

"Because of the higher levels in tobacco products, the tobacco industry is succeeding in getting young people addicted faster," she said.

Virginity form of safe sex for columnist

RYNE WITT

In a world driven by sex – where it is around every corner, either in advertisements, TV shows or clothing styles – it is seemingly always on the mind of men and women.

The myth about men thinking about sex every seven seconds isn't true, though. The truth is that 54 percent of men think about sex every day or several times a day, according to The Kinsey Institute – a research group that focuses on sex, gender and reproduction.

Another eye-catching statistic from the institute is that 18-29 year olds who are sexually active do the deed an average of 112 times per year. That means in order to catch up, I have to have sex 560 times to be an average sexually active 23 year old.

Yes, that means I am a virgin, which makes me the minority in the sexual world. By age 20, 77 percent of people have had sex, according to a Public Health report in 2003.

Being the minority in this situation is somewhat awkward for anyone. As a guy, I see it from that point of view.

It seems as if it is a badge of honor for most men to have sex for the first time. I also feel like many people believe in order to be a man, a person must have sex, not only that, but as much as possible.

I don't live by those hyper-masculine rules. That is one of the reasons why sex hasn't happened in my life.

Many people believe that being a virgin at my age means a person is either strict on religious beliefs or a loser and can't get a woman. The latter one I won't be able to disprove to the guys or girls out there laughing, but the religious one is something I can discuss. I used to be very religious, but as life went on, the religious side of me wore off, and I discovered more about how I felt about different ethical questions. Sex was one of the biggest issues I faced.

Casual sex for me was never going to be an option, because in order to have such an intimate moment with someone, I needed a certain level of trust with them. That trust can't be gained in one night at a party or the bars.

Since that trust can't be gained in one night, it would take a relationship to exist in order for me to have sex and, to be honest, everyone I have dated has never gotten to that point where I trusted them that much.

Also, I believe casual sex has a few downfalls. It raises the chances of someone contracting a sexually transmitted disease, which can be a physical "badge of honor" for all those out there who think safe sex is unnecessary. I also feel like I would be using my partner to achieve a sexual high, and treating them as an object, not a human being.

So that leaves me with my virginity, and I'm happy because I don't feel like I've fallen into society's pressure of sexuality.

I have lived my own way, and I recommend people try that with their own sexual lives. Whether it is having sex or just remaining abstinent, find what fits you and live it safely.

'50S, '60S FILM LEGEND CHARLTON HESTON DIES

LOS ANGELES — Charlton Heston, the Oscar winner who portrayed Moses and other heroic figures on film in the '50s and '60s and later championed conservative values as head of the National Rifle Association, has died. He was 84.

The actor died Saturday night at his home in Beverly Hills with his wife Lydia at his side.

"Charlton Heston was seen by the world as larger than life. He was known for his chiseled jaw, broad shoulders and resonating voice, and, of course, for the roles he played," Heston's family said in a statement.

WEEKLY HOROSCOPE

AQUARIUS
(Jan. 21 - Feb. 19)

Try not to push your philosophies on others. Don't be disappointed if you don't get your way emotionally. The key to feeling good about yourself will be to do something about it.

PISCES
(Feb. 20 - March 20)

Don't let friends convince you that you should contribute to something you don't believe in. You could be cornered, so be prepared to tell the truth.

ARIES
(March 21 - April 20)

All your energy should be directed into moneymaking opportunities. Opportunities for advancement at work are apparent. Take time to catch up on gossip and make plans to do a little adventure travel.

TAURUS
(April 21 - May 21)

You might want to take a look at your direction in life. Your self esteem will benefit. Friends will be loyal and caring. Your involvement in interest groups might bring you popularity.

GEMINI
(May 22 - June 21)

Don't be critical or overly opinionated with dislikes; it could cause disapproval and unwanted opposition. Deception will play an important factor in relationships. Travel will be to your advantage; however, it might be expensive.

CANCER
(June 22 - July 22)

You will enjoy the interaction with children and take great pride in the projects you've completed. Work quietly at your own goals and forget about situations that you can do little about. Positive connections can be made if you get involved in environmental organizations.

LEO
(July 23 - Aug. 22)

Your time, not your cash, will do a lot more for your relationship. Look into the cost factor, but don't try to get backing yet. You can't always have your own way.

VIRGO
(Aug. 23 - Sept. 23)

Don't settle for less than the best. You can meet potential new mates if you socialize with friends. Be prepared to jump quickly if you wish to stay in the forefront of your industry this week.

LIBRA
(Sept. 24 -Oct. 23)

Luck is with you, regardless of the financial venture. Be discreet about your feelings, and hold back until you find out a little more about the person who's coming on to you. You can make the most headway if you put in some overtime.

SCORPIO
(Oct. 24 - Nov. 22)

You can't always have your own way. Those who have been too demanding should be put in their place or out to pasture. Get involved in groups that can offer intellectual stimulation.

SAGITTARIUS
(Nov. 23 - Dec. 21)

You will do well with clients this week. If you can put some work into home improvements, you should. Try not to jump to conclusions.

CAPRICORN
(Dec 22. - Jan. 20)

Keep your eyes and ears alert for any evasive or deceptive statements. Take some time to change your house around. Let go of the past in order to progress.

CONTESTING PROTESTING

Legislature quickly passes funeral-picket bill

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed a bill Thursday that regulates distances and time periods of protesting outside of funerals – again.

A similar bill, which had a provision stating the bill would not go into law until a judge or federal court ruled on the constitutionality of the funeral protest rules, was passed last year. On March 11, the Kansas Supreme Court ruled the court system could not make that type of decision.

The House and Senate acted quickly to pass the new bill, which prohibits protesting within 150 feet of a funeral one hour before, during or two hours after the service ends, and makes it illegal to block public streets or sidewalks, just like the bill last year. Violators of the law could face significant fines and up to six months in prison.

"I appreciate the legislature moving swiftly on this issue so we can protect the privacy of families in their time of

4 laptops stolen from Haymaker resident

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Another theft at Haymaker Hall was reported to campus police this weekend, according to K-State Police reports.

Police were called after a female resident reported four laptops were stolen from her room. This is the third reported theft from Haymaker Hall in as many weeks.

Capt. Donald Stubbings of the campus police said the recent incidents are unrelated.

"Often thefts come in groups where someone finds an easy target, such as an unlocked room," Stubbings said.

Stubbings also called the incidents "crimes of opportunity" and said the perpetrators will continue stealing until they are caught or run out of things to steal.

Also over the weekend, K-State Police were called out to the scene of two medical emergencies, and both incidents ended with the subjects refusing medical attention.

The first occurred at Weber Hall; police were alerted when a woman began having seizures. When EMS arrived ,the woman was out of her seizure state and declined transport in the ambulance.

The second incident occurred at Moore Hall. Police were called when a student had an allergic reaction. The student was found vomiting and refused EMS treatment, saying the vomiting was caused by some food eaten earlier in the day.

Parking lot B17 was also of interest to police when they received a call about a hit and run. Bystanders reported a black Chevy Silverado was hit by another car and the driver of the car did not stop.

UFO expert to talk on government cover ups

By Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An expert will give a lecture about how unidentified flying objects, better known as UFO's, do exist during a lecture at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday at the K-State Ballroom.

Robert Hasting, a professional UFO researcher, lecturer and lab analyst, will be presenting his case for the existence of UFOs and subsequent government cover ups, in his lecture, "UFOs: The Secret Story."

Hastings will present his arguments based on previously classified documents and information secured from the Freedom of Information Act.

The Union Programming Council is sponsoring the event.

According to the Center of UFO Studies, Hastings has researched nuclear weapons–related UFO sightings since 1973. Over the last 25 years, he has presented his findings at more than 500 colleges and universities nationwide.

Students showcase native crafts, toys at cultural exhibit in Union

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The scenery in the K-State Student Union reflected that of an outdoor bazaar in a foreign country Monday.

As part of K-State International Week, students from international groups showcased their homelands during a cultural exhibition.

The display included exhibits from the Philippines and Taiwan, which were the most popular, and also Sri Lanka, India, Nepal, China, Saudi Arabia, Africa, Thailand and Japan.

Elizabeth Maghirang, member of the Philippine Student Association, said the theme of the group's table was "The Filipino home," showcasing handicrafts that would be present in Filipino homes.

"We wanted to bring awareness of the culture and traditions of the Filipinos and show their openess and hospitality," Maghirang said.

The students stationed at the booths were eager to share their culture with students. A group of local grade-school students were also in attendance, taking detailed notes of each booth.

Many of the booths offered interactive components with their display. One was the Taiwanese booth, which had tops that people could spin, pinwheels to make and whirly bird toys to fly. Each visitor was able to poke a box covered with tissue paper so they could get a prize. The prizes were either fake Taiwanese money or plum candy.

The Japanese booth painted calligraphy with black paint on students' hands. Risa Iwada, sophomore in textile marketing, was a calligraphy artist. She said she studied calligraphy in elementary school and that learning calligraphy was difficult.

Many African nations were represented by the African Student Union. There were items from Kenya and the Congo, among others. They had soft furs from feral cats that are used for decoration, a woven sign that said 'Bonne Sante' and carved statues of African women. They also had traditional water gourds and antelope horns.

Sri Lanka is a small island with nice beaches, said Manuja Lamabadusuriya, graduate student in chemistry.

She said it is mostly a Buddhist country, but there are three different races. The majority of the people in Sri Lanka are Sinhalese, the second group are the Tamil, and the final race of people on Sri Lanka are a mixture of European and Sri Lankan. She said the money in Sri Lanka is called Rupees.

Thailand's display was centered around the Songkran festival that takes place from April 13 to 15. Paween "Mac" Piyasil, graduate student in software engineering, said the Songkran festival is a water festival that is three days long.

They anoint the elderly with water that has been scented with jasmine or roses, to show respect. Dried, white soy is added to water along with scent and liberally applied to the skin, as well. Thailand's heat makes the water festival quite fun as friends and relatives splash each other with water.

Ming Hu, graduate student in bioecological engineering who manned the Chinese table, said the exhibit benefited both American students and international students.

"I learn from others so that I can help my country, and I have learned a lot from K-State students and faculty," Hu said.

Haydee Ramirez, graduate student in agronomy, Shayne Sulabo, graduate student in food science, and Jonathan Aguilar, graduate student in biological and agriculture engineering, adjust their display in the cultural exhibit in the K-State Student Union Courtyard from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday.

Praise band inspires, engages college-aged church members in worship

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A collage of voices rises to the ceiling as one; they break through the roof to find their way to the Lord. Dimmed lights surround the enthralled audience and a wave of spirituality flows over the audience like a ripple breaking over a lake. Praise band members flash knowing smiles at one another.

Every Sunday morning, this scene plays out at University Christian Church. The church welcomes a flood of visitors as though they are reunited family, complete with warm smiles and firm handshakes.

Once the lights dim, strangers and friends rise together to praise the God they came to worship as one.

"The music lets people let go of whatever inhibitions they have and lets them worship," said Alex Bency, freshman in accounting and bass player for UCC's praise band.

Worship, after all, is what brings the band together with an enthusiastic congregation each Sunday at both 9:45 and 11 a.m. services.

"You know that you're dialoguing with people and taking them to a place where they worship, and that's the fun aspect of it," Ben Worcester, music specialist, said. "I think the responsibility of leading people in worship is what leads me. Leading people to Christ is more important than thinking about the lyrics."

The UCC praise band performs a variety of songs ranging from traditional hymns of decades past to the contemporary praise songs of the present.

"We like to use old hymns and redo them so that they sound more contemporary," Worcester said. "Our pool of songs is as far reaching as the old hymns that you might hear at a traditional service to things you might hear on the radio."

Along with working together to choose and produce music, the praise band members also function together as a tight-knit family.

Bency first joined the band at the beginning of the fall semester. He attended his first church service at UCC and walked up to the band, requesting to play with them once or twice. The recent loss of their prior bassist had the band welcoming Bency immediately.

Since then, the members have become so comfortable with one another they no longer require mid-week practices. Instead, they meet prior to the 9:45 a.m. service to play through the set for the morning.

"I came here and made some really good friendships, and I love playing with them all," Bency said. "They're all each different in their own way. Everyone in the band and on the tech team is connected. I'm a part of this church that no one else sees. I get to help make this church great."

Engaging the audience, which is mainly composed of a college demographic, is one of the most vital roles the band plays in the worship process.

"I think having a professional-sounding and -looking service is crucial to engaging people," Worcester said. "College students are used to going to concerts, and to make it look like that experience, you have to put your best forward. It's very crucial to reach them where they are."

Songs like "This Little Light of Mine" are revamped by the band to include a more modern sound. This contemporary twist allows the group members to engage the audience in clapping and even a bit of dancing. With this animated movement, however, also comes the word and worship of the Lord.

"The lyrics are so rich in theology that it's hard when you're singing them to not think about the majesty and the grandeur of God and to not think about the things that he's done for us," Worcester said. "The other part is that we offer an experience that is unmatched and unrivaled. We point you to the hope in Christ. We facilitate worship in a way that can't be done any way but corporately."

Even Senior Pastor Ryan Hayden's sermon Sunday morning agreed, "Words have meaning." The words proclaimed through song should not stop there but should resonate throughout the lives of those who sing them.

Both Worcester and Bency said the best part of playing with the praise band is the connection they form with the church and its people.

"It's working with these people and seeing them every week," Worcester said. "You feel like you're investing in their lives. You feel like you make a difference every day. That's what I like best."

The service opens and closes with the chiming of voices raised to God. The congregation stands, lifting their eyes, hands and hearts to the heavens – worshiping the Lord through music.

City to conduct work session on new ethics policy

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners will conduct a work session to discuss the new ethics policy for city employees and elected and appointed officials at 5 p.m. today at City Hall. The work session continues from January when officials heard suggestions from the appointed board, commissioners and citizens interested in developing a policy.

"The commission has sought a lot of input from the community and stake holders," Commissioner Bruce Snead said. "[The commissioners] are looking for any final guidance or refinements so we can proceed to a final draft document."

According to the agenda, the ethics committee will present its revisions to the commission, and open discussion will follow. The committee has refined the policy to four main topics; transparency, gifts and gratuities, conflicts of interest and advice and accountability.

Transparency includes the access to any and all public records pertaining to the commission members, meetings and official city business. The transparency point does not allow for the release of any private or confidential information.

Gifts and gratuities are defined as any money intended to influence the decision of a city employee. If the employee believes the gift is to influence a decision, the gift is not offered openly, or the gift is more than $25 or a person gives more than $50 to an employee within one year, it is unethical for the employee or official to accept.

Conflicts of interest concern both legal and ethical issues regarding ownership or interest within businesses conducting business with the city. The ethical concern requires council members or board members to abstain from discussion and or voting because of the conflict.

The policy has no disciplinary actions for its violators.

"The point [of the policy] is education and information ... so [city employees and officials] can make appropriate decisions," Snead said.

HOW TO RESPOND TO ETHICAL ISSUES:

— Transparency-access to public records
— Gifts and Gratuities-no more than $25 at one time and no more than $50 per year per person — Conflicts of Interest-may need to recuse themselves from discussion or voting
Advice and Accountability-seek advice from fellow commissioners, City Attorney or board liaison

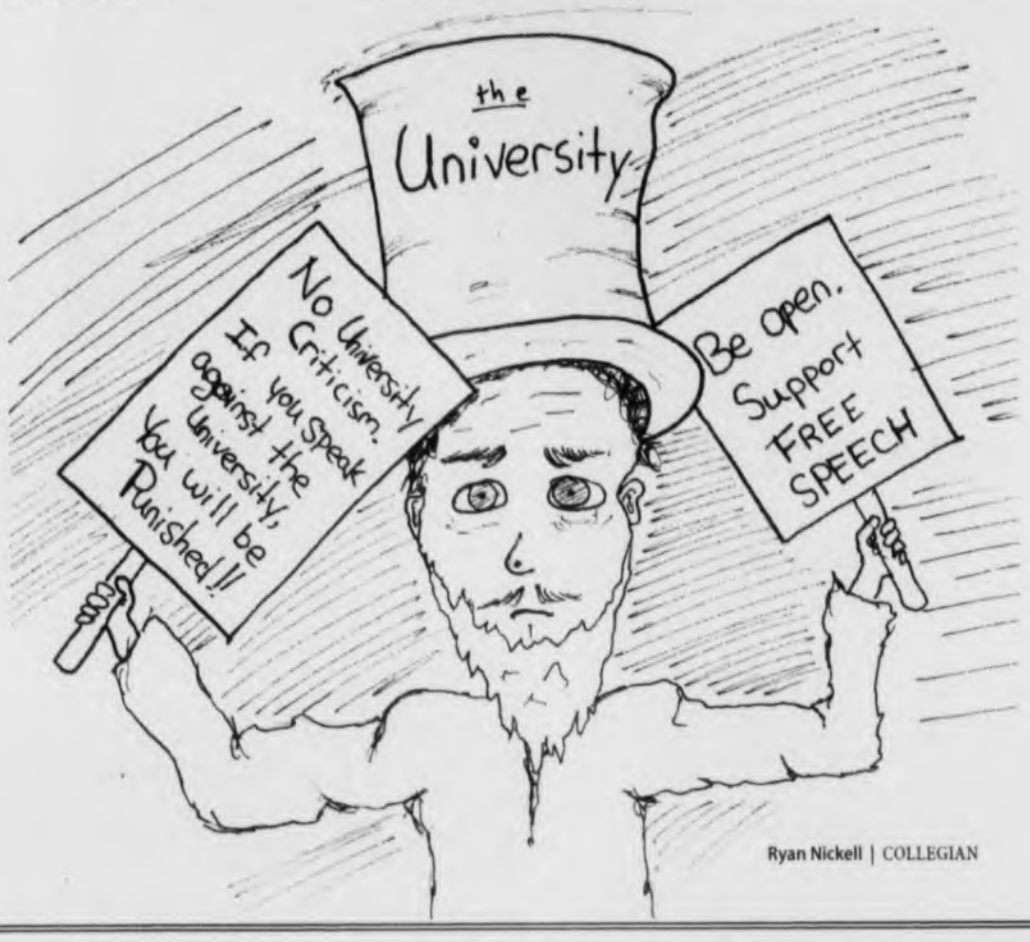
Talk isn't cheap

Students should appreciate free speech on campus



JOE VOSSEN

Most of us never stop to consider how many times a day we encounter someone on campus exercising their right to freedom of speech. You might have a large stack of those free, little green Bibles at home. Or have heard the banned book readings in the Union Courtyard. Infamous funeral picketer Fred Phelps has even made appearances on the K-State campus. Being part of a college community, we take freedom of expression for granted.

Across the nation, some universities are cracking down on student newspapers and the right of their students to assemble. Organizations like the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education have sprung up to assist students at universities on "Red Alert" lists – a nasty label that indicates a college's administration or governing body is unconcerned with the First Amendment rights of students. In 2006, the Supreme Court refused to hear arguments in the case Hosty v. Carter, in which an Illinois university shut down its student newspaper for publishing articles critical of the administration – a course of action that let the lower court's decision stand (a major blow to student press advocates in this country).

Some students are simply unaware of their rights. A 2004 Associated Press article stated that one out of every four college students in the nation can't list a single right named in the First Amendment; the same article said 11 percent of our professors and administrators couldn't either.

Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

Colleges and universities are forced to walk a thin line between allowing freedom of speech and discouraging the dissemination of hateful, violent material. Giving equal access to all groups, ideas and viewpoints is the only way to ensure each voice has a chance to be heard.

Campuses should not restrict free speech; argument and idea exchange is exactly what college is all about. During our college years, we are exposed to new ideas and concepts. We take classes we might not agree with, but probably come away smarter and more open-minded for having taken them. In 1971, in its opinion of the case Healy v. James, the Supreme Court said "the college classroom is the 'marketplace of ideas.'"

The downside to freedom of speech is we might come in contact with ideas that are at best uncomfortable and at worst humiliating But establishing rules to restrict freedom of speech based on comfort and convenience is not the answer. University rules on harassment and hate crimes are sufficient to combat speech or actions based on hatred. A college has two free speech responsibilities: Ensure free speech is heard and campus security is upheld. To do the latter, we do not need unconstitutional bans on free speech.

Universities have a responsibility to not restrict freedom of speech on our nation's campuses. The First Amendment and our courts have given citizens the right to speak their mind. And we have a choice. We can listen, or we can ignore. We can speak out, or we can be silent. Enjoy the privilege.

McCain's honesty could carry him in election

ADAM PHAM

For individuals who have found themselves disillusioned or driven to indifference by politics, cynicism can be attributed to a singular event.

In my mother's generation, the transformative episode was Watergate; in mine, it was Monica Lewinsky. In moments like those, the facade of glamorous and prestigious respectability slips from the proud portrait of American politics, revealing the ugly Darwinism and constantly collapsing scenery of Washington underneath.

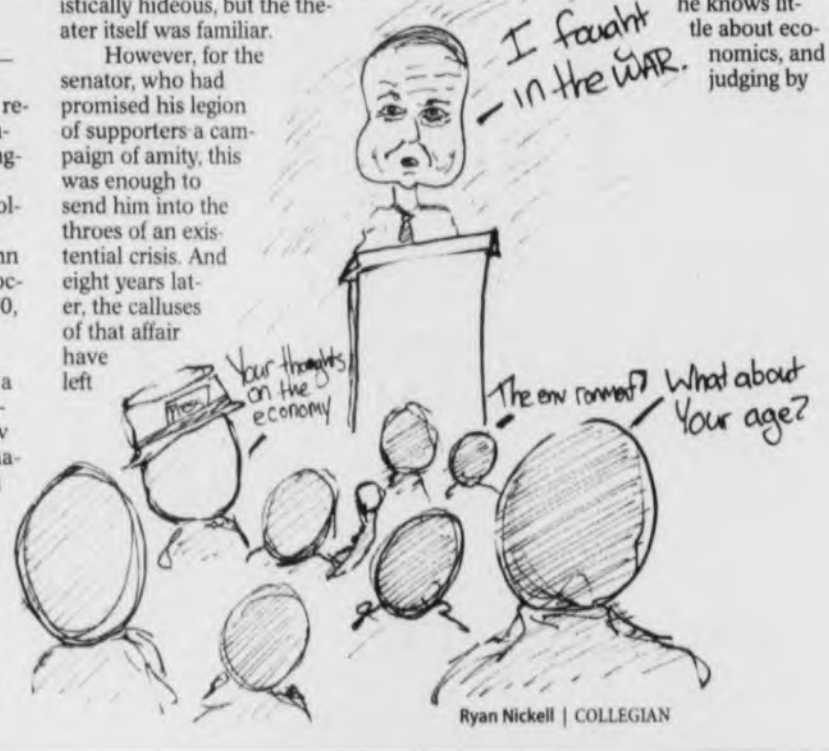
For most, this death of noble politics is only a private sadness in the childhood of our adulthood. For John McCain, the realization seemed to occur tragically too late: February 2000, in South Carolina.

Sen. McCain and then-Gov. George W. Bush were embroiled in a close race for the nomination – McCain had just decisively won in New Hampshire, and the upcoming primary in South Carolina offered him an opportunity for checkmate. But Bush, sensing danger, launched an appalling smear campaign against the senator. The innuendoes and outright suggestions made by the then-governor's surrogates and proxies were, among others, that McCain had abandoned his fellow veterans, that his wife was a drug addict, and most famously, that he illegitimately fathered a black child.

McCain's own feeble retaliations backfired. He lost the primary and his support and never regained his footing in the race; less than a month later, he quietly withdrew.

Now, as for Bush and his disgraceful associates – and for the rest of us too – this was merely an entr'acte in a ballet we had all seen many times before and would see many times again. The particulars were uncharacteristically hideous, but the theater itself was familiar.

However, for the senator, who had promised his legion of supporters a campaign of amity, this was enough to send him into the throes of an existential crisis. And eight years later, the calluses of that affair have left him as different as did his captors in Vietnam.



He still boasts the most diverse array of political weaknesses. At 72, he would be the oldest man to take office for the first time. He still has that legendary penchant for rudeness, impetuousness and occasionally, outright stupidity. And now, unfortunately, any political support for him requires a defense of the war as a prerequisite.

By his own admission, he knows little about economics, and judging by some of his recent blunders, he doesn't seem to know a lot about geopolitics, either. The truth is, in this election, McCain is just intellectually outmatched by his opponents.

But he is also a genuine patriot, one of the noblest and most inspiring breed. His personal account of his experience in Hanoi is still stirring and inspirational and without the slightest hint of disingenuousness. Four generations of military service – his own children included – stand as testimony to their sincerity, and swiftboating of any kind should be met only with our absolute condemnation and dismissal.

And regardless of his current rhetoric, what makes him palatable to moderates and Democrats is precisely what has always made him the opposite to his own party; he is not a reliable conservative. He's just an honest, plainspoken man who doesn't ultimately wish to answer to the bureaucrats of either persuasion. But his politics will forever be overshadowed by the legacy of his heroism, a fate to which he seems rather comfortably resigned.

Perhaps he should be. The important question now is, when the charge is leveled on a national stage – as it will be, by everyone – that McCain is the most dignified candidate, the most fitting, the most honorable, what will be the response of the beloved junior senator from Illinois?

TO THE POINT

Picketing bill shows respect without taking away right to protest

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The death of a loved one is one of the most difficult times a person can deal with in life. At a funeral, family and friends remember their loved one with joy, sadness and every emotion in between. But there are times when a funeral is made even more difficult, especially when people picket the service for political reasons.

It is also difficult to support one group and not the other. Families deserve respect when remembering a loved one, but our constitution makes clear our right to protest. The bill that Gov. Kathleen Sebelius is pushing is a good compromise between the two.

As human beings, we strongly oppose disrepecting someone who has died, especially if they did so protecting the freedoms we so often take for granted. However, we also believe that the Constitution applies to all Americans, and that the rights it mentions are a gift we should appreciate.

The Kansas Legislature passed a bill that balances these two concerns rather well. We do not support a law that takes away our Constitutional rights, but this legislation does not reach that extreme. It allows picketing funerals, but only within a certain distance. This is not too much to ask someone who wants to project a political agenda by using someone's death as a podium.

We must be cautious, however, that the government not try to pass a law that outlines when, where and how protests should occur. It is hard to defend groups that protest these funerals because of their views, but if their rights are stripped, we could be next.

So we say "good work" to the Governor and the Legislature for producing a law that is sound, reasonable and Constitutional. But we will be wary if the laws start to cross boundries that we have enjoyed for more than 200 years.

Students bring Philippine culture to campus

Joslyn Brown

Campus is buzzing with many cultural events in celebration of International Week. But there is an even more specific cultural group that is also celebrating its history this week.

The K-State Philippine Student Association has been busy this week organizing the first-ever K-State Philippine-American Heritage Week — cosponsored by the Union Program Council — and participating in International Week festivities, said Rommel Sulabo, PhilSA president and graduate student in animal science.

The group that performed traditional Philippine dances at the International Festival of Talents Sunday, helped sponsor a Philippine film showing today and has arranged to be part of the International Fashion Show from 7 to 9 p.m. today in the Union's Forum Hall.

On Thursday, PhilSA will take the spotlight at their Barrio Fiesta from noon to 2 p.m. in the Union Courtyard. The Barrio Fiesta is free and open to anyone, Sulabo said.

"Barrio fiestas are very common in the Philippines — especially now, in April and May," Sulabo said. "It's basically a religious celebration for each town on the birthday of their patron saint.

"It's a very colorful tradition. People usually prepare a lot of food, and anybody can go to any house and partake in the food there."

In the tradition of barrio fiestas, there will be free Philippine food available for anyone who attends the fiesta, as well as a karaoke-like singing challenge and traditional dance performances, Sulabo said.

There is also an exhibit in the Cat's Pause lounge on the second floor in the Union about Philippine-American heritage and information on the Philippines, he said. The exhibit will be in the lounge all week.

PhilSA was formed in summer 2004 by a group of active Filipino graduate students on campus, said the group's faculty adviser, Ronaldo Maghirang, professor of biological and agricultural engineering.

"Before the formation of the group, we participated, but it was not organized," Maghirang said. "So, with K-State PhilSA, we now have an organized way of sharing culture and getting to know members better and also are able to share traditions with the Manhattan community," Maghirang said.

Sulabo joined the group two years ago, when he first moved to Manhattan. He said he joined to meet other Filipinos who could show him around Manhattan.

Sulabo also said PhilSA reaches out to Philippine-American students who are curious about their Filipino culture. Students like A.J. Herrs, senior in geology, also make up the group. Herrs' mother is Filipino, and his father is American.

"I just wanted to find out about my heritage, since I was born in the U.S., and I wanted to be among people that understood that — that understood the Filipino side of who I am," Herrs said.

The group is active year-round and has about 20 members, half of whom are Filipino, Rommel said. The group often does Philippine performances for and shares information on their culture with area schools and community groups, Maghirang said.

PhilSA also fundraises for Philippine causes through annual activities like a bingo night. The proceeds are used to buy school supplies for students in rural areas of the Philippines or disaster relief in Philippine countries, Rommel said.

"Right now, we are also planning to start a scholarship program for deserving high-school and college students in the Philippines," Rommel said.

Anyone interested in PhilSA can join the group even if they do not have any Philippine heritage, Rommel said. Joining PhilSA gives American students an opportunity to learn more about the Philippines and meet new people, Herrs said.

More information on the group is available at www.ksu.edu/philsa.

Forum will address Ogden, Manhattan social services

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas residents are invited to participate in public discussion on the needs of social services in Manhattan and Ogden, Kan. The meeting will be at 6 p.m. today at Westview Community Church, according to a press release.

This is a fourth forum designed for the community to define resources for providing better social services.

"It is a chance for everyone to tell their opinion about public services," said Kim Frazier, associate coordinator of the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan. "These collected materials will be included in the report and given to public officials."

Youth development, recreation, employment, housing and other issues concerning the local community will be addressed. Among the population served are families, ethnic and racial groups, retirement communities, people with disabilities, immigrants, refugees and others.

Manhattan High School students and Kansas Social and Rehabilitation Services members even visited the event last time.

"Students are strongly encouraged to participate," Frazier said.

Those who do not know anything about services provided or would like to be a volunteer can go and get useful information.

"Social services are different for everybody, and we are looking for a diverse discussion," said Lynda Bachelor, coordinator of the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan.

Usually 10-20 people come to the forum. Bachelor said a demand for social services recently had increased in Manhattan because of the military influx.

These forums are funded by a grant from the Center for Engagement and Community Development at K-State and are taking place with help from the Social Service Advisory Board for the City of Manhattan, the United Way of Riley County, and the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan, according to the press release.

According to K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan, a meal will be provided and served 15 minutes prior to 6 p.m. Transportation is available upon request. To register, contact the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan at 785-532-5701.

MEN'S GOLF

K-State sends young lineup to Missouri

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

GREGSON

Coming off a fourth-place finish at the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic on March 31 and April 1, the K-State men's golf team has left the Sunflower State for Columbia, Mo., to compete in the UMB Bank Missouri Tiger Intercollegiate.

The two-day tournament, taking place at the par-72 Club at Old Hawthorne, began Monday at 8 a.m. with a shotgun start.

The first two rounds were played Monday, and the third round will begin at 8 a.m. today, also with a shotgun start.

K-State shot a 15-over par 591 through the first round of play. Sophomore Mitchell Gregson was in seventh place after shooting a two-over par 146. Also in the mix was freshman Daniel Wood, who had a three-over par 147 and was in 10th.

The tournament features one of the most talented fields the Wildcats have seen all season. The 11-team field includes five teams ranked in the latest Golfweek.com top-50 poll. Those teams include No. 22 Michigan State, Shocker Classic champion and No. 23 Wichita State, No. 24 Indiana, No. 39 Arkansas and No. 40 Michigan. Other notable teams include K-State's Big 12 counterparts Iowa State and tournament host Missouri.

The Wildcats' lineup is headlined by sophomores Joe Ida and Gregson, who both had strong showings at the Shocker Classic. Ida's third-place finish was his fourth top-5 finish of the season, and Gregson recorded his fourth top-10 finish with a ninth-place effort. Junior Robert Streb is in his 44th appearance of his career, which ranks No. 3 all-time in tournaments played as a Wildcat.

Wood and Kyle Smell, two members of K-State's freshman class – which is rated No. 19 in the nation in the latest Golfstat.com Freshman Class Impact Rankings – are occupying the fourth and fifth spots of the lineup.

Both competed as individuals in the Shocker Classic and tied for 15th place overall. This is Wood's first appearance in the lineup since the Fresno Lexus Classic on March 10-11 and Smell's first appearance in the lineup since the Braveheart Classic on March 3-4.

K-State also has one individual competing in the tournament. Coach Tim Norris gave the nod to senior Kyle Yonke during Friday's practice.

The Wildcats have been successful this season, finishing in the top-10 in all but one of their contests. That stretch also includes seven top-5 finishes, highlighted by a first-place finish in the Ron Moore Invitational on March 21-23.

They need one more top-5 finish to match K-State's all-time record, which was set during the 2003-04 campaign.

Golfers head to sunny Florida for final tune up

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team travels to the Sunshine State to play in the Canes and Cardinal Classic in Miami Lakes, Fla., at Don Shula's Golf Club this week for its last tournament before the Big 12 Championship.

The Wildcats look to build some momentum after placing 13th at the Mountain View Intercollegiate in Tucson, Ariz., marking their best finish of the spring season.

The Wildcats have been unable to repeat their fall showing, when they placed in the top three in four out of five tournaments. Coach Kristi Knight said that part of the reason they have struggled is because of a lack of confidence.

"We have not had a good spring season, and the results haven't been what we wanted," she said. "They are the same players they were in the fall, and they have got the ability – they have just got to remember that and go out and play."

Knight said they have struggled getting all the players to play up to their potential in the same round each time out.

"We have gotten two good scores a round," she said. "There have only been a couple of times when we had three solid rounds. They haven't been as patient with themselves as they were in the fall. They want to play so well that they have tended to press when they have one bad hole. We just need to trust our instincts."

The Cane and Cardinal Classic marks the final regular season tournament for the Wildcats, giving them one last opportunity to recapture the confidence they had in the fall. The two-day, 54-hole tournament features six squads in Golfweek.com's top 50, headlined by No. 25 Notre Dame, and No. 28 Tulsa.

Knight said they are treating it just like every other tournament they have played in and there is no added pressure on them.

"If we can have some good things happen, then our confidence will build," she said. "Leading up to the Big 12 Championship, you want to play well, but we want to play well in every tournament, so we're going about our business the same way as always."

Knight said she feels good about her team, and they are capable of playing great golf.

"They were focused in their practice round [Sunday]," she said. "We had a really good practice. We have to trust ourselves and take the good with the bad. Our goal is to finish strong, and I think that's what we are going to do."

BASEBALL

Baseball to face off against No. 5 Wichita State tonight

By Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-STATE BASEBALL VS. WICHITA STATE
6:30 tonight
Tointon Family Stadium
TV- Kansas Now 22
Radio- KMAN-AM 1350

The ranked teams keep visiting Tointon Family Stadium. Tonight will feature the K-State baseball team against the No. 5-ranked Wichita State Shockers.

K-State (15-15, 2-7 Big 12 Conference) is on a five-game losing streak after dropping all three games to No. 16 Texas A&M over the weekend. Wichita State (24-4) has visited the Wildcats for 24 straight years, with the overall series in favor of the Shockers, 47-25.

Wichita State is on a winning streak, with 21 of their last 22 in its favor. The Shockers' last series settled in their favor with a 2-1 series win over Missouri State. MSU was victorious in the Friday night game, with a 7-4 win in 10 innings. The only Big 12 team they have faced was an April 1 matchup against Kansas, which they won 7-3.

As a team, Wichita State is hitting .328 with 20 home runs. The team's leading hitter is junior Conor Gillaspie, who has a .438 batting average with three home runs and 38 RBI. Junior Ken Williams has also been hot for the Shockers, and is on a 10-game hitting streak with a .385 batting average overall.

Through the first 30 games, K-State has had 21 home runs, a feat they didn't reach until game No. 51 in 2007. Sophomore Adam Muenster is on a 15-game hitting streak and has been hitting .413. Sophomore Justin Bloxom has been hitting .432 in the last 13 games with three home runs and 19 RBI. Against non-conference opponents, freshman Carter Jurica has been the most consistent with a team-high .354 batting average.

The projected starter for K-State is sophomore A.J. Morris. Morris is 3-1 on the year with a 4.07 ERA. For Wichita State, they look to redshirt freshman Tim Kelley, who is also 3-1 on the year with a 4.09 ERA. He has only allowed 19 hits on the year and has 17 strikeouts so far.

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Adam Muenster rounds the bases during the April 1 game against Central Arkansas. Muenster has been hitting .413 on the year. The Wildcats will face off against No. 5-ranked Wichita State at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

Columnist suggests alternate mottos

JOEL JELLISON

The K-State football team's 2008 motto is a phrase already familiar to the area. That motto is "Ad Astra Per Aspera," and it's the state motto of Kansas. The Latin phrase, also stamped on the state seal and the Kansas Flag, means "to the stars through difficulties."

But perhaps there are a few better motto ideas out there for the team. I decided to try and come up with a few on my own.

'TO INFINITY AND BEYOND'

A good quote from "Toy Story's" Buzz Lightyear and a suggestion straight from the Fourum. Thanks, readers.

'LIFE IS LIKE A BOX OF CHOCOLATES — YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT YOU'RE GOING TO GET'

Forrest Gump first said it concerning life's uncertainties, and in the Wildcats last season, there was a blend of good and bad.

'AT LEAST WE'RE NOT NEBRASKA'

Yeah, we lost to them last season, but who would want to be them right now? Not me.

'JUST DO IT'

No one is using it these days are they? Wait, Nike? Who's Nike?

'POWER OF TWO'

Last year was the power of one. Add one, and you easily get two.

'FREEMAN LOST THE FRO, SO THE LOSING SEASON HAS TO GO'

That's right, Freeman cut his hair, and now the Wildcats should respond by cutting a few losses off their record.

'35-7'

K-State plays Oklahoma this season, and it's never too late to remind the Sooners of when their perfect season was tarnished in 2003.

'GET YOUR GAME FACE ON'

Bob Knight might not believe in a game face, but it couldn't hurt to enact a bit of "Little Giants" intimidation.

'OH, YEAH'

The phrase of the Kool-Aid man. Imagine the Wildcats, led by Willie of course, breaking through what looks like a brick wall and yelling the motto out loud. Yeah, I think I have been watching too much YouTube.com lately.

'WE PLAY FOR KEEPS'

Michael Beasley and Ricky Bobby both said it at one time. And it means so much.

We all know the motto means very little to the fans compared to the players. It's likely the fans will always try to come up with their own mottos or even some wisecracks on the current, but that's part of what being a sports fan is about.

Obviously, my choices for mottos probably aren't the best and others out there have suggestions that are, by far, better. So if you do have a good idea, why not try to sneak it into the Fourum? Who knows what good ideas are out there.

K-State freshman forward headlines NaismithLives.com's All-America team

Freshman forward Michael Beasley has been named a first team All-American by yet another basketball Web site.

NaismithLives.com announced their first-ever All-American teams today.

Beasley averaged 26.5 points and a national-best 12.5 rebounds per game en route to leading the Wildcats to 21 wins. Beasley had three 40-point games on the season. He was named a first-team All-American by The Associated Press, John R. Wooden Award, CBS Sports.com, Dick Vitale, ESPN.com, Rivals.com, Sports Illustrated, The Sporting News and U.S. Basketball Writers Association. He has lost out to North Carolina's Tyler Hansbrough in every Player of the Year competition, except for by Rivals.com and CBSSports.com. The only other national award to be handed out is the Wooden Award, which will be presented Friday.

Launched in January of 2008, NaismithLives.com covers all levels of basketball, from high school to the pros.

Candidates debate presence in Iraq

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Republican presidential candidate John McCain said Monday that calls from his Democratic rivals to withdraw U.S. forces from Iraq stand as a "failure of leadership" as they are making promises they cannot keep. Democrat Barack Obama said the failure rests with McCain's support for an open-ended occupation of Iraq.

Addressing the Veterans of Foreign Wars, McCain criticized Obama and Democratic Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton and insisted that last year's U.S. troop build-up in Iraq brought a glimmer of "something approaching normal" there, despite a recent outbreak of heavy fighting and a U.S. death toll that has surpassed 4,000.

Pulling out now would jeopardize recent gains, McCain said.

"I do not believe that anyone should make promises as a candidate for president that they cannot keep if elected," McCain told the crowd of about 130 people, mostly veterans.

"To promise a withdrawal of our forces from Iraq, regardless of the calamitous consequences to the Iraqi people, our most vital interests, and the future of the Middle East, is the height of irresponsibility," he said. "It is a failure of leadership."

McCain, the presidential nominee-in-waiting, is closely tied to the unpopular, five-year-old war. McCain was a vocal advocate of the troop increase strategy eventually adopted by President Bush, and is seeking to convince people the strategy is working. He also argued that Iraq will need more money and aid for reconstruction.

Clinton and Obama, still battling for the Democratic presidential nomination, dispute the claims of success, arguing the war has failed to make the United States safer.

"It's a failure of leadership to support an open-ended occupation of Iraq that has failed to press Iraq's leaders to reconcile, badly overstretched our military, put a strain on our military families, set back our ability to lead the world, and made the American people less safe," Obama said, using McCain's own words against him.

Clinton chastised McCain's Iraq strategy as "four more years of the Bush-Cheney-McCain policy of continuing to police a civil war while the threats to our national security, our economy, and our standing in the world mount."

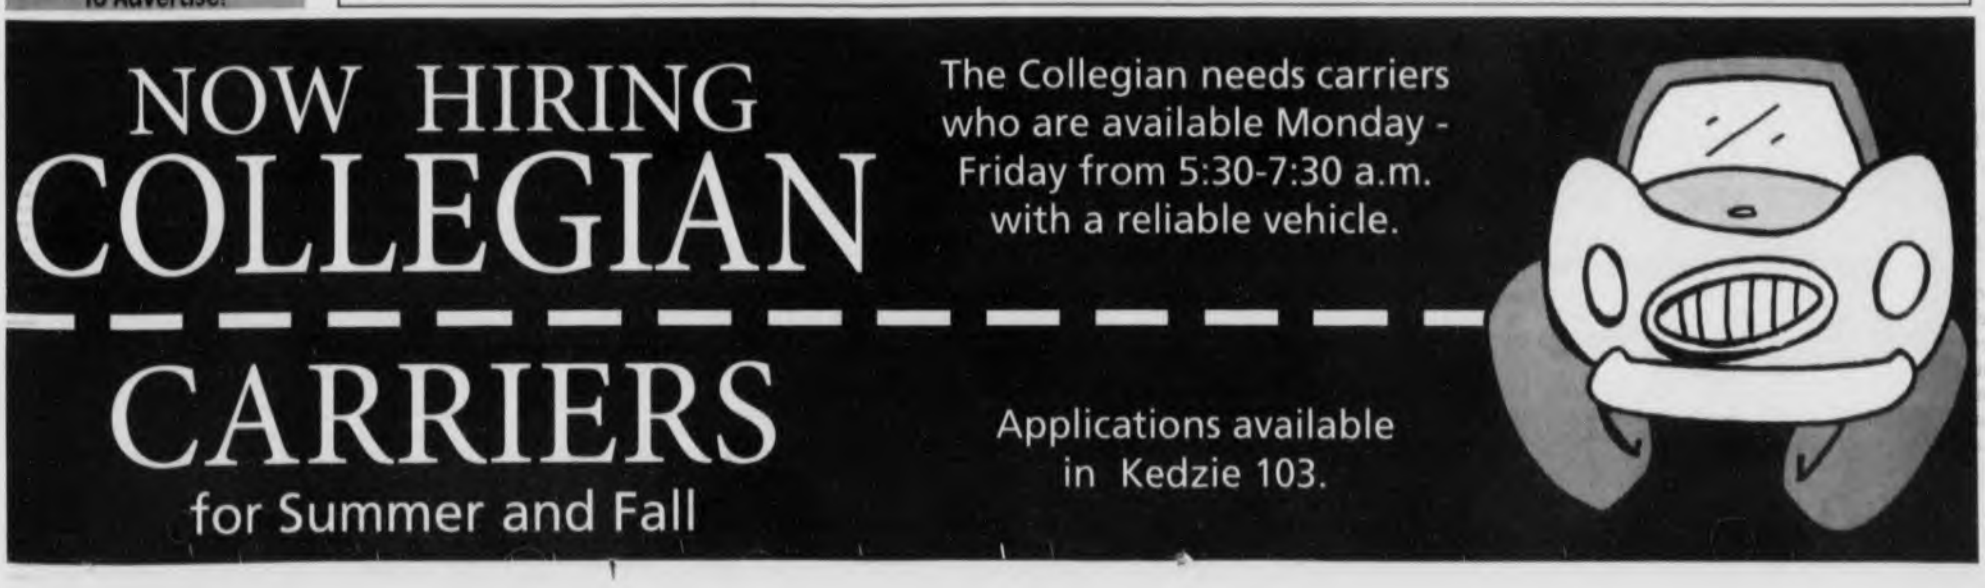
"We simply cannot give the Iraqi government an endless blank check," she said. "It is time to end this war as quickly, as responsibly, and as safely as possible."

Debate will intensify this week as Gen. David H. Petraeus, the top commander in Iraq, and Ambassador Ryan C. Crocker testify to Congress. Clouding their testimony is fighting that erupted late last month as U.S.-trained Iraqi forces attempted to oust Shiite militias from Basra in southern Iraq.

For his part, McCain suggested the Democrats' promise to withdraw troops was motivated by ambition rather than honesty.

People deserve a candid assessment of progress in Iraq as well as of the serious difficulties that remain and of the consequences of hasty withdrawal, McCain said.

McCain warned against the swift withdrawal of troops advocated by Obama and Clinton, saying Iraq could quickly become a terrorist haven.



"These likely consequences of America's failure in Iraq would, almost certainly, require us to return to Iraq or draw us into a wider and far costlier war," the Arizona senator said.

BILL | Phelps spokeswoman says bill will not affect church's picketing

mourning," Sebelius said in a press release from the governor's office. "As we honor the memories of those Kansans who we've lost, we wish to shield their families from the despicable and disgraceful displays of those seeking publicity."

Rep. Raj Goyle, D-Wichita, said the "judicial trigger" was put in the bill last year to avoid paying fees to the Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka.

"It was really out of caution to ensure the Phelps family would not recover attorney's fees from the state, but it was not essential or necessary to the buffer zone bill," Goyle said.

John Fliter, associate professor of political science, said several states have passed bills with judicial triggers to save money on court cases.

"Ultimately, the courts are going to decide it anyways," Fliter said.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said she was not aware of the trigger when she voted for the bill last year.

The issue in the bill, which Carlin said has been addressed by the state government as early as 1992, is in response to protests at military funerals all across the country by the Westboro Baptist Church.

Shirley Phelps-Roper, Westboro spokeswoman, told the Topeka Capital-Journal the bill will not change their protesting because they "like the busy intersections," which are usually outside the 150-foot radius.

Goyle, one of the bill's authors, said the bill was passed quickly to ensure the protection of grieving Kansas families.

"Kansas families who are mourning in the loss of their loved ones deserve protection from hateful protests," Goyle said.

Though this is the second year the bill has been passed by the state legislature, Goyle and Carlin said it should be ruled constitutional and does not expect complications in the future.

"What can come up, though, is there can always be a piece in the legislation we miss just like in 1992," Carlin said.

MAN DATES | Casually hanging out, grilling 'acceptable' for some guys

step over it. Cooking a meal for a friend is weird, but grilling is different. There's just a difference."

Scott said there are three type of "dates" for men.

"There's man dates, manly dates, and gay man dates," Scott said. "It's like Bush's terrorist threat meter, with elevated, high and low risks. You just know."

He said hanging out with a guy friend one on one is more spontaneous and less planned.

"It must have masculinity," Scott said.

Other men, like Matt Martinez, senior in biology, agree that man dates are more spontaneous.

"A date with a woman can have more pressure on it," Martinez said. "With a guy, it's just two guys hanging out. Going out with a buddy is just more casual."

Martinez said he prefers the term "boys night" to "man date," and would probably opt for lunch with a guy friend instead of dinner to avoid awkwardness. He said, however, he would not worry about the stigma of two men being out together.

"I wouldn't be doing anything to attract that kind of attention," Martinez said. "Going out one on one with a good friend is a good way to talk about things you can't in a group of people."

Other men believe the type of place you go to can make a big difference.

"Eating casually with a friend is OK as long as it isn't anything fancy," said Joel Campbell, junior in preprofessional business administration. "Eating at a nice place would be awkward though. It wouldn't be any fun to go with a guy to a restaurant to eat a $30 steak."

While man dates might be becoming more common, that does not mean all men are comfortable with the terminology.

"The term 'man date' is dumb," Campbell said. "It is a double standard with women. Two women going out would not be called a date. It's more normal and accepted in society, which isn't really fair."

More men spending dates eating out, gaming together

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Normally, tables for two seat a man and a woman. But when Brad Scott, freshman in open option, went to Famous Dave's to grab a bite with a friend, his date was of the male persuasion.

"We were worried the waiter would think we were gay," Scott said. "Two guys eating together looked weird. We joked about it all night."

According to a New York Times article, the "man date" is increasing in popularity. The article described the event as "two heterosexual men socializing without the crutch of business or sports. It is two guys meeting for the kind of outing a straight man might reasonably arrange with a woman." Examples of man dates include dinner, a movie, going for a walk or cooking together.

"I don't make it a big deal," said Scott, who said he has never previously heard the term "man date."

"A friend and I will just grab some food, then come back and play video games or catch a movie."

The Times article said attending a movie as a twosome can be an anxiety-inducing event for two men. Some will even go so far as to leave a seat between them. However, Scott said this is not something he thinks about and has seen multiple movies with male friends.

"I would definitely sit next to a guy friend," Scott said. "It would be a waste of time to find an extra seat in a theater. I just want to get in, watch the movie and get out."

However, he added that the type of movie would completely change his feelings.

"If I would ever consider taking a girlfriend to a particular movie, I would never go to it with a guy," Scott said.

He acknowledges there is a line between what is appropriate for two heterosexual males and what is not, but added it can be difficult to define.

"Anything intimate would not be cool," Scott said. "It's a tough line to draw, and I don't want to be the one to draw it – or

MUSIC REVIEW

Trashy guitar solos interfere with band's emotions on 4th album

"Real Emotional Trash"

★★★½☆

Review by Mark Sibilla

Guitar solos have always been an integral part of rock-'n'-roll music. When correctly applied, they help the forward momentum of a song and add an emotional catharsis that can elevate a song to a new, exciting height. But for every guitar solo that works, there are a handful that are bloated and self-indulgent and don't really add much to a song.

On "Real Emotional Trash," former Pavement front man Stephen Malkmus' fourth solo album with his backing band The Jicks, guitar solos liberally are littered throughout the album to create Malkmus' jammiest album to date.

It seems Malkmus didn't get to work his guitar enough on his last album, "Face the Truth," which was a concise, adventurous album that had only one song longer than six minutes. "Real Emotional Trash" has an average song length of six minutes.

These long, meandering songs aren't always a bad thing when Malkmus can infuse the songs with his humorous and engaging storytelling or when the solos enhance the song, but not every twist and turn Malkmus takes in each song is justified.

I don't want to denounce Malkmus' guitar skills, which on many of the songs are hot, but I don't always agree that a guitar solo after each verse in a song, which many contain, is necessary. "Real Emotional Trash" sounds like it was a blast to play on, but there are times when the band's playing doesn't coalesce into an always-engaging album.

"Real Emotional Trash" starts out promisingly with the grungy stoner-rock/blues anthem "Dragonfly Pie." The opening words perfectly sum up Malkmus' contributions on the music world: "Of all my stoned digressions/Some have mutated into the truth/ Not a spoof." And "Real Emotional Trash" is full of Malkmus' infamous stoned digressions both lyrically and musically.

"Hopscotch Willie" is the song that immediately hits all the pleasure centers in my brain. It is a song that urgently takes its time. It rolls along on a galloping drumbeat that is always on the verge of exploding into beautiful chaos. The song is about Willie, a suspect who swore he was framed for murder, but many facts and all-too-coincidental events point otherwise. The song contains excellent guitar work that seamlessly fits into the song's narrative.

"Real Emotional Trash" also contains some of the most gorgeous and contemplative songs Malkmus has recorded. Songs like "Cold Son," "Out of Reaches" and "We Can't Help You" are truly touching. They examine existentialism from the point of view of a former slacker who is now married and has children. But as mature as these songs sound, Malkmus always remains a trickster. For example, "Cold Son" doesn't end so much as it suddenly breaks down into a series of random drum hits, plinking piano keys and Malkmus spouting gibberish.

However, as stated before, not all Malkmus' ramblings are justifiable. The album's title track would have been much better and had more of an effect at half its length, while the jam in "Elmo Delmo" stinks like bad Phish.

Overall, "Real Emotional Trash" is successful and is hindered only by its guitar solos. Malkmus certainly knows how to write a catchy melody and wrap it in the strings of a really great guitar lick, but occasionally, the album falls into the trap of overindulgence. Malkmus has created an album filled with songs that have many rollicking highlights, but he has failed to create one that is consistently engaging.

Justices question abortion subpoenas

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several Kansas Supreme Court justices said they were skeptical Tuesday that a grant jury investigation into a Wichita abortion provider constitutes harassment.

TILLER

The Kansas Supreme Court heard oral arguments in the case Jane Doe, et. al v. the Honorable Michael Corrigan, et. al. Tuesday morning. The court reviewed requests from Dr. George Tiller and his patients to stop a citizen-petition-called grand jury's subpoena.

Tiller's attorneys said one of the grand jury's subpoenas would force him to turn over about 2,000 patients' files.

148th Fort Riley soldier dies in Iraq

Staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Fort Riley soldier stationed in Iraq died Sunday after his vehicle encountered an improvised explosive device.

BURGOS-CRUZ

Capt. Ulises Burgos-Cruz, 29, died in Balad, Iraq. Burgos-Cruz, who was from Puerto Rico, was an ordinance officer serving on a military transition team assigned to the 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division.

He entered the Army in June 2001 and deployed on the 1st Infantry Division transition team in June 2007.

Spc. Matthew T. Morris, 23, also died in the attack. Morris was assigned to the 2nd Squadron, 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment out of Fort Hood, Texas.

To date, 148 Fort Riley soldiers and airmen have been killed while serving in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom.

K-State operating system to remove SSNs

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The implementation of the new iSIS operating system just didn't change the enrollment system at K-State. It is the driving point for replacing all K-State students' identification number, which is now their Social Security number, with the Wildcat ID number, which appears on every student's ID card.

iSIS is expected to be fully implemented by September, said Lynn Carlin, interim vice provost for information technology. K-State has worked to eliminate Social Security numbers from all central systems for more than a year and has already removed them in instances like Hale Library checkouts and exam sheets and cards.

Next fall, iSIS will replace the SSN with either the Wildcat ID or a randomly generated number in some instances; this new number will serve as the student ID number and will be used for all university forms except financial aid, employment and other federally regulated systems, Carlin said. Faculty and department offices will no longer see students' Social Security numbers on forms like class rosters or add/drop sheets.

"The only people who will have access to student Social Security numbers in the future will be the students themselves and central administrative staff who need to know it in order to deal with legal and state reporting requirements," Carlin said.

Once iSIS is completely implemented in the central system this fall, Carlin said IT will examine all other systems to make sure Social Security numbers are eliminated.

The iSIS system uses the same operating system, Oracle PeopleSoft Campus Solutions, as the University of Kansas and several other universities in the U.S.

KU and the University of Missouri implemented the PeopleSoft system in 2004, removing the SSN as student ID numbers. Jennifer Gehrt, director of the LASER project, which is in charge of iSIS implementation, said her team has visited KU to talk about how that school implemented the system, but that was not the deciding factor.

Though KU has removed the SSN from most records, last semester anonymous employees at the KU Recycling Center sent 14 forms with students' Social Security numbers on them to three newspapers, according to a Sept. 20, 2007, article. Ed Rice, associate vice president at the Division of Facilites, said he has not heard of any problems at K-State like the one at KU.

According to K-State policy, most personal records are archived as long as they need to be, then they must be disposed of properly. The policy does not tell how these records

See SECURITY, Page 7

SECURITY TIPS

- If asked for your Social Security number, ask why they need it and how they will use it.
- Do not carry your Social Security card with you where it is at risk of being lost or stolen, like in your purse or wallet.

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

- Don't say your SSN out loud where others might hear it.
- Don't store SSNs or other confidential information on laptop computers, USB flash drives, or other portable devices that are easy to lose or have stolen.

SHRED DATA

- Never put papers with confidential data on them in the trash or recycling bin. Always shred them thoroughly with a cross-cut shredder.
- Never leave papers out in the open in your office that have SSNs printed on them.

Compact fluorescent bulbs easy to use, energy efficient

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thomas Edison said "the value of an idea lies in the using of it," and many people in the U.S. are following that philosophy with energy-efficient lighting.

CFLs, which are small fluorescent lights that can be screwed into a regular light socket, use about 75 percent less energy then regular incandescent bulbs and last about 10 times longer, according to the Environmental Protection Agency's Web site, www.energystar.gov.

Ralph Diaz, co-owner of Gaia Salon on Poyntz Avenue, said he began replacing his incandescent light bulbs with CFLs about two years ago.

He said he saw a significant change in his energy bill and the light bulbs he originally replaced are just now dying off.

"I think they have been great," Diaz said. "I think we have definitely seen a drop in our energy bill."

He said the reason he has seen such a drop in his energy bill is because the wattage of fluorescent lights is much lower than incandescent lights.

A 15-watt CFL is equivalent to a 60-watt incandescent light bulb, according to westarenergy.com. With this wattage difference comes a significant change in people's energy bills.

Westar Energy calculated that if people switched 10 100-watt light bulbs in their house, which they used for about seven hours per day, then they would save about $10 per month and $130 per year.

If every U.S. citizen replaced one regular incandescent light bulb with a CFL, the amount of energy saved could light more than 3 million homes for a year and prevent greenhouse gasses equal to the amount of more than 800,000 cars' emissions, according to the EPA.

Megan Bindel, president of Students for Environmental Action, said CFLs are easy to get – most local retailers, like Wal-Mart and Target, sell them, though they are a little more expensive then regular incandescent light bulbs.

"They are more expensive at first, but they help save on your energy bill," said Bindel, senior in biology and geography.

However, there is a downside to these savings. Fluorescent lights contain a small amount of mercury, which can be harmful. The EPA suggests taking advantage of local recycling facilities to dispose of them once they burn out, which generally takes about two years.

One place to dispose of old CFLs is the Riley County Local Household Hazardous Waste Facility, 6245 Tuttle Creek Blvd.

Dennis Peterson, director of the facility, said it used to only accept larger fluorescent tubes, which are used in many businesses, but because of the increase in demand, the facility recently began accepting the smaller household CFLs. He said it is free for individuals to drop off their light bulbs, but there is a charge for businesses.

The facility charges for some because it costs workers 45 cents per light bulb to send it through the contractor who will then send it to another facility that removes the mercury to use for more light bulbs.

Peterson said it is not necessarily a bad thing to simply throw away old fluorescent light bulbs.

The amount of mercury in the bulbs is just enough to cover the tip of a ball-point pen, and the landfill where any local trash ends up is lined, so it is highly unlikely that any mercury could get into the environment. He said sending fluorescent light bulbs to landfills is still an approved practice by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Rachel Soash, curator of education at Sunset Zoological Park, said using CFLs is an important and simple switch.

She said the zoo switched out every one of its light bulbs sometime last year, and it was a simple matter of counting how many there were and then going and buying the fluorescent bulbs.

She said Sunset Zoo has probably saved a lot of money since then because of the lower energy costs. She said this is one environmental choice that anyone can make.

"It's easy and there is something everybody can do," Soash said. "So don't feel like you can't make a difference because everybody has the power to do that."

K-STATE BLOOD DRIVE

Annual blood drive hopes to continue solid student, faculty turnout

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Teri Novotny was 27, she gave birth to her third child, and it almost cost her her life.

Her daughter was delivered by cesarean section, and Novotny had a severe internal hemorrhage as a result. By the time she got into surgery, a blood transfusion of about eight pints was needed to save her.

The average amount of blood in an adult's body is 10 pints, according to Blood Centers of the Pacific, an organization that works to schedule mobile blood drives.

"I was just grateful to be alive," Novotny said. "Recovery was really tough, too."

She said the physical stress of having a baby was secondary to the effects of losing so much blood.

It took Novotny a long time to realize just how important having that blood available had been to her family and future. She said it became her goal to give back eight pints of blood.

She said she used to be deathly afraid of needles, and until her blood transfusion, she had always found an excuse not to donate blood.

"My friend held my hand," Novotny said. "It wasn't that bad."

Novotny gave the equivalent of those eight pints of blood and continued to donate. She calls herself a lifetime donor, and it has become her mission to recruit others to do the same.

"I don't think people realize what the 30 minutes and one pint of blood can mean to people," Novotny said. "Sometimes it takes a face."

Novotny and her daughter, who she almost did not get to see grow up, appear on one of the American Red Cross blood donation posters.

"I am the face of someone whose life was saved," Novotny said. "There are seven people out there who spent the time to save me a lifetime."

BLOOD SUPPLY

More than 4.5 million people need blood transfusions each year in the United States and Canada, according to Blood Centers of the Pacific. Someone needs a blood transfusion about every two seconds in the United States.

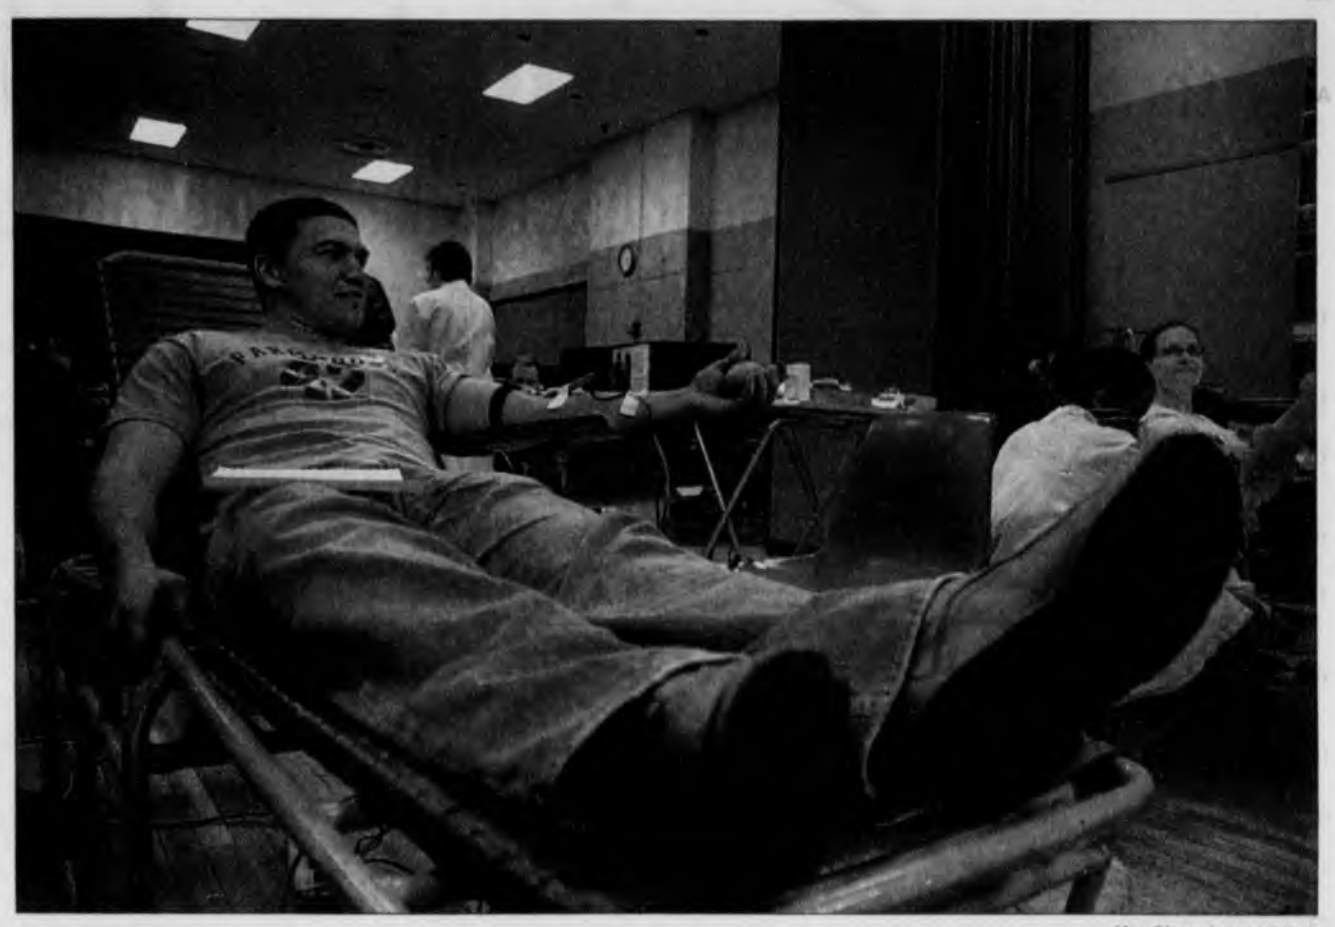
Blood is needed for various medical emergencies and procedures including traumas, heart surgeries, joint-replacement surgeries, organ transplants, premature births and leukemia, and cancer treatments. Some people who know they might need blood for a surgery donate their own ahead of time.

During a transfusion, a person can receive whole blood or any of three parts of blood.

Parts of blood include red blood cells, which carry oxygen to and from tissues and organs; platelets, which can control bleeding; and plasma, the liquid part of blood that aids in clotting.

The plasma portion of blood can be donated in a separate process, in which the rest of the blood is returned to the donor.

Plasma is often used as a starting point through which health products are produced, said Christine Kuhinka, corporate communications representative of ZLB Plasma Services, a plasma collection company with a local donation center in Manhattan.



Kuhinka said people often rush to donate blood, but they should know that what people generally need in an emergency situation is plasma because it replaces their fluid levels.

Monetary compensation is often offered in exchange for plasma donation.

"It's sort of a win-win-win on many different levels," Kuhinka said.

The Red Cross estimates about 25,000 new blood donations are needed daily to keep an adequate national blood supply. Since human blood cannot be manufactured, there is no substitute for it.

Kym Dickey, communications specialist with the American Red Cross Central Plain Region, said it is the optimal goal of the Red Cross to keep about a three-day supply of blood available. The organization sometimes has a problem with collecting enough of certain blood types.

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Luke Baker, sophomore in agricultural economics, donates blood for the first time at the Red Cross blood drive in the K-State Student Union Ballroom Tuesday afternoon.

Every person belongs to one of the following blood types: A, B, AB or O. In addition to these categories, each person is either Rh-positive or negative.

At the time of the interview, Dickey said the Red Cross had a one-day supply of O positive, the most common blood type, and less than a half-day supply of O negative. She said the supply often fluctuates.

According to Blood Centers of the Pacific, about 40 percent of the population has type O blood, making them universal donors. Type O blood is given to people in emergency situations when there is no time to test for their blood type. People with AB blood can receive any type of blood.

If an individual receives the wrong sort of blood by transfusion, the antibodies in their blood will attack the conflicting type, making them sick, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Dickey said as medical treatments and technology progress, blood demand continues to increase and the shelf life of blood in supply might soon be an issue as well.

A recent study published in the New England Journal of Medicine suggests cardiac surgery patients who receive blood older than two weeks experienced greater risks of complications.

The study does not claim to be the final word on the issue, but points out the problem of blood deterioration with age. The Food and Drug Administration's current rule allows blood to be stored for up to six weeks.

WHO CAN DONATE BLOOD?

Kristi Ingalls, donor recruitment representative for the Flint Hills Red Cross, said 37 percent of the population is eligible to donate, but it is estimated that only a small percentage actually do.

General guidelines for blood donation eligibility are that an individual be at least 17 years old, healthy, weigh at least 110 pounds and not have donated in the past 56 days. A complete list of guidelines can be found at www.redcross.org.

Signed parental consent is required for 16-year-olds.

The paperwork can be found at www.bloodgiveslife.org.

BLOOD DONATION AT KSU

Ingalls said high-school and college students account for about 25 percent of blood donations.

The October 2007 campus blood drive resulted in a collection of 685 pints of blood, which exceeded the Red Cross goal of 680. The April 2007 drive fell short of the 800 pint goal with a total 771 pints collected.

Ingalls said blood drive turnout in the spring is often less substantial than in the fall. Cynthia Hoffman, blood services officer for the K-State American Red Cross Club, said she thought more students would donate if they concentrated on where their blood was going instead of the donation process.

Hoffman received a blood transfusion when she was a high school senior.

She said her friends and family are blood donors because of her experience and might not have donated otherwise.

"Without that, I wouldn't be alive," Hoffman said.

TO THE POINT

Attorney needs assistance

When students get into legal trouble, there are only so many places they can turn. Parents, other family members and friends can offer financial or emotional support, but they are not always the best resources for legal advice. Fortunately, this is where a school's student attorney comes in.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

In a recent interview, K-State's student attorney, Sarah Barr, said though she loves her job and is passionate about helping students, it can be frustrating because she has no help from either an assistant or fellow student attorney.

Handling legal issues is a hefty responsibility, and it should not be up to one person to advise an entire student population of more than 23,000 students on the law.

K-State should provide Barr with either assistants to take care of the smaller, more mundane tasks or another student attorney to share the load and consult with.

K-State takes care of its students by providing less expensive, state-school tuition, handling on-campus parking issues and offering many free weekend activities at the Peters Recreation Complex and K-State Student Union. And while we should appreciate our school's provision of a student attorney, we should not be satisfied with an overworked lawyer who needs help.

K-State should take care of her and the students she helps by giving her some assistance to lighten the load.

Coming to a halt

Independent trucker strike causes more detriment than benefit

BRETT KING

After being cooped up inside for the past few months, spring has finally decided to grace us with its presence, and the time between April and June is protest season for individuals everywhere. The season starts off slow, but builds to its peak on Socialist Workers Day, also known as May Day. After May 1, the protests will start a slow decline as the weather gets hotter.

Across the globe, we have seen student protests in France and riots over food shortages in Haiti last week, but we shouldn't forget about the ones here at home.

On April 1, independent truckers across the country joined together to protest the increase in diesel fuel and food costs. According to the Associated Press on April 1, truckers in New Jersey, Florida, Michigan and other states pulled their trucks over to the side of the road or drove at slow speeds to impede traffic on the highways in hopes of forcing the government and their employers to pay them higher wages and lower the price of fuel.

WNBC News in New York told the story of Lamont Newbern, a trucker from Wilmington, N.C. According to the story on April 1, Newbern said, "The gas prices are too high. We don't make enough money to pay our bills and take care of our family."

Instead of working and at least trying to help their families through this difficult time when a lot of people are struggling, these truckers decided to strike, putting more financial strain on everyone.

The problem with these "workers of the world unite" strikes is that the workers' actions end up coming back to bite them. Truckers who do not deliver their loads or keep other truckers from doing so drive up the cost of food and fuel across the country. At least they got their point across.

The wonderful U.S. Congress did what it always does when it sees a problem brewing on the horizon – call oil executives in for a congressional hearing and do nothing.

Representatives on the House Select Committee on Energy Independence and Global Warming called the top executives of the oil industry in to discuss their profits and the elimination of tax breaks for their publicly traded corporations.

With a lot of saber rattling, Democratic representatives like Ed Markey of Massachusetts proclaimed, as reported by CNNMoney.com on April 1, "Americans are hoping that the top executives from the five largest oil companies will tell us that these soaring gas prices are just part of some elaborate hoax. Unfortunately, it's not a joke."

These high prices are not part of some conspiracy against the citizens of the United States; they come from a simple case of supply and demand for an inelastic good.

People in the United States fail to realize that if they invest in a simple 401K or mutual fund, there is a good chance they are stockholders in these oil companies. Those record profits have been passed on to shareholders and benefited many average citizens without them even knowing.

Solutions will not come from increasing taxes or stripping away profits from businesses. The actions of these truckers are throwing more fuel on the fire. Before grabbing picket signs, stop and think of how these actions will affect the rest of this country.

U.S. shouldn't lose sight of North Korea threat

GRADY BOLDING

On Jan. 29, 2002, President George W. Bush gave the first State of the Union Address following the horrific terrorist attacks nearly five months prior on Sept. 11, 2001. In the speech, he not only stated the Western world's intentions in the War on Terror, he also labeled three rogue nations as part of the "Axis of Evil": North Korea, Iran and Iraq.

More than six years later, danger still exists, and is still growing worse by the day. Nobody in this administration seems to take a hint.

According to an Associated Press article on March 30, North Korea threatened South Korea with "destruction" in response to escalating problems in the region.

"Everything will be in ashes – not just a sea of fire – if our advanced preemptive strike once begins," said an unidentified North Korean military commentator.

Tensions between the two nations have reportedly increased since South Korea's new president, Lee Myung-bak, assumed power at the beginning of the year. Mincing no words, he's taken an early tough stance against North Korea.

Naturally, North Korea is against such action and is taking rather extreme measures to prove it by testing long range missiles and threatening nuclear attack on South Korea.

But that's not what has me so agitated. Why isn't the United States responding to such drastic events? Here is a rogue state of the Axis of Evil that is threatening one of our allies with destruction, and there's hardly any press coverage. Not only that, this country actually possesses nuclear capabilities.

I'll never forget when the BBC reported on Oct. 9, 2006, that North Korea successfully tested a nuclear device without any sign of radioactive leakage. The U.S. reported a "seismic event" shortly followed by Russia stating it was "100 percent certain" that the device was nuclear. Two years later, Pyongyang has threatened Seoul with nuclear war and the Bush administration has plans elsewhere.

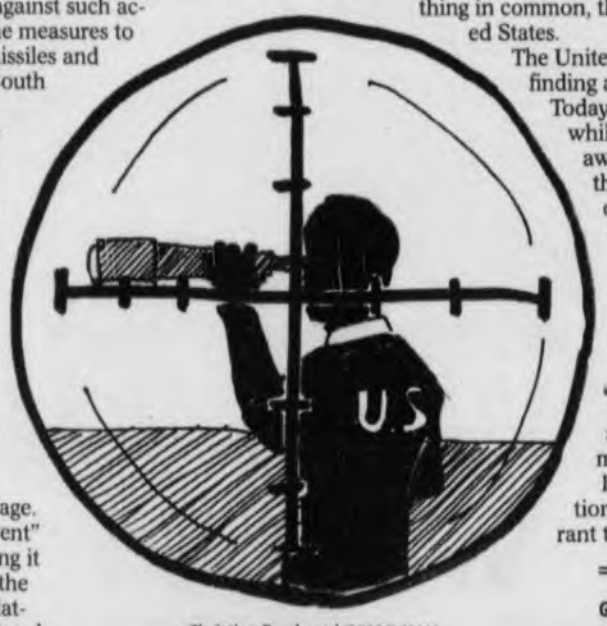
On Oct. 17, 2007, the New York Times reported Bush said during a press conference that the dangers involving Iran's potential possession of nuclear weaponry were significant.

"If Iran had a nuclear weapon, it'd be a dangerous threat to world peace," Bush said.

Not only that, he later had the nerve to say, "So I told people that if you're interested in avoiding World War III, it seems like you ought to be interested in preventing them from having the knowledge necessary to make a nuclear weapon."

Here are the facts, people: North Korea, in the past, has tested long-range missiles, threatened South Korea with death and detonated an actual nuclear device.

Iran has tested long-range missiles, threatened to wipe Israel off the face of the Earth and continued its pursuit of nuclear energy. However, unlike North Korea, it possesses not one nuclear weapon. That's a big difference. So why does North Korea seem to be getting away with all this?



As previously stated, in 2002, President Bush labeled North Korea, Iran and Iraq as part of the ridiculous Axis of Evil – three rogue nations that had little to do with the attacks on 9/11 or each other. All three countries did have one thing in common, though: They did not like the United States.

The United States invaded Iraq in 2003, not finding any nuclear or chemical payloads. Today, it continues investigating Iran while North Korea, it seems, is getting away with all the black marks that the Bush administration tries to pin on Iran, having already messed up in Iraq.

Confusing? You bet.

Regardless, in dealing with these countries, it seems that the next administration needs to consider focusing on the clear and present dangers of today (North Korea) as opposed to the clear and present possible dangers of tomorrow (Iran).

It is obvious that this administration has proven once again too ignorant to do so.

CITY COMMISSION

Commission discusses ethics code

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brian Williams, management assistant for Manhattan, gave an update to City Commission about the code of ethics under development during its meeting Tuesday. Williams identified the core issues of the code.

He said the first change to the code included a preamble that defined certain minimum expectations of conduct and should inspire appropriate behavior above and beyond the legal standard. The rest of the meeting focused on the language of each issue.

William Frost, city attorney, cautioned the council against naming the person or persons responsible for policing the elected members on violations of the code.

"If, in fact, the intent is to vest the individual with the authority first and last, then the code must reflect that," Frost said.

The commission agreed that each member must make the decision based on his or her own judgement, and that a public disclosure of possible conflict helps with transparency.

"The benefit that comes from the transparency of [seeking advice publicly] is in the end, it is the individual's responsibility to make that choice," Commissioner Bob Strawn said. "If he makes the wrong choice, he will have to stand against the scrutiny of the citizens, which can be worse than any legal scrutiny."

Frost answered questions concerning conflicts of interest about K-State. Two commissioners are employed by the university, and Commissioner Bruce Snead wanted to clarify concerns with budgeting the City/University Fund, which funds several projects that affect K-State and the community.

"K-State is, by legal definition, not a business, and therefore you cannot have a substantial interest because it is a government entity," Frost said.

Grad helps start K-State Volunteer Center

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kim Frazier knew she wanted to stay in Manhattan after her graduation last spring, but she was not sure what her career would be. Frazier, a May 2007 graduate in English, said she had a little community-service experience from high school and college, so she decided to look for a job in that field.

After she searched for volunteer and nonprofit organization opportunities at www.idealist.org, Frazier said she saw an AmeriCorps VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) opening in Manhattan. After she was hired for the position, Frazier became the only full-time staff member with the K-State Volunteer Center for Manhattan.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

Kim Frazier, May 2007 graduate, helped start the K-State Volunteer Center last summer. She spends about 40 hours a week working on various volunteer opportunities within the Manhattan and K-State community.

CO-FOUNDING A VOLUNTEER CENTER

Along with Lynda Bachelor, project coordinator for the K-State Volunteer Center of Manhattan and staff member with Leadership Studies and Programs, and four part-time student volunteers, Frazier helped start the center in July 2007.

The volunteer center is within the civic leadership unit within Leadership Studies and Programs. K-State paid AmeriCorps VISTA $1,500 to hire Frazier as a VISTA volunteer instead of paying a staff member full-time with the volunteer center.

Frazier said she works about 40 hours each week in the civic leadership office and coordinates activities like the Martin Luther King Jr. Day of Service. She also gives presentations after her workday ends about volunteer opportunities for students, and she volunteers with different community projects each weekend.

AmeriCorps VISTA's mission is to "fight poverty with passion." During her July-July 2007-08 service, Frazier's rent costs are paid, but her salary is at poverty level.

Frazier receives $800 each month, which pays for her utilities, other bills and food. Her income qualified her for the Food Stamp Program, which helps low-income people buy food needed for good health. She said she applied for the program through Social and Rehabilitation Services.

"It's really forced me to buckle down with money," Frazier said. "I'm kind of frivolous with spending, especially as a college student."

Frazier said she wanted to stay in Manhattan after graduation because she was a transfer student who had only been in Manhattan two years. After transferring to K-State during her junior year, she said she didn't become as involved with clubs as she would have as a freshman.

"As a college student, you can operate just within the university," she said. "Now that I've graduated, I feel like I'm more closely involved with the university than I was when I was a student."

Frazier said VISTA has exposed her to different networking opportunities and helped her pay off student loans. After one year of service, VISTA volunteers receive either a $4,725 education award for college or $1,200 in cash.

"It truly does look good on applications because you're committing yourself for one year to service without a lot of pay," Frazier said. "Volunteering is a way to build your résumé and figure out what you want to do."

SERVICE LEARNING APPLICATIONS

As a student at Butler County (Kan.) Community College, Frazier heard about service learning in an English class. Service learning is a teaching method that allows students to apply what they learn in the classroom with service to the community.

Each student was assigned a different community organization during the course. Frazier found information about Meals on Wheels on a Web site, talked with organization members and wrote a composition of materials about Meals on Wheels.

Frazier has shared the experience during outreach presentations with students, Bachelor said. Bachelor also said Frazier connects easily with students and community members, whether she is presenting to a large lecture hall of students or a group of 15 students.

"Because she was able to talk about her experience through the classroom, that was the kicker. She knew what it was all about," Bachelor said. "She's a great advocate for service learning and applying what she learns in the classroom."

FUTURE PLANS

Though Frazier's service term ends in July, she will serve a second year with VISTA in 2008-09. Because the volunteer center received sustainability funding from Student Governing Association for its first three years, Frazier said finding additional funding sources will become one of her responsibilities next year.

Frazier said she still is thinking about her plans after next year. Her options include either going into nonprofit work or attending nursing school. Frazier said she plans to start volunteering with Mercy Regional Health Center's oncology unit in several weeks.

Kale Monk met Frazier three years ago in the K-State residence halls.

Monk, junior in family studies and human services and psychology, said Frazier's volunteer center experiences have boosted her confidence and allowed her to gain career-oriented knowledge in areas like marketing nonprofit organizations.

"[Volunteer center staff members] don't exactly have the biggest budget, so we can't pay a full-time person," said Monk, who also works for the K-State Volunteer Center for Manhattan. "She's been a pivotal player in helping us get the volunteer center started. She's one of the founders of the program, and without her, we probably wouldn't be where we are with the program."

Walks doom Wildcats in loss to Shockers

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team showed early promise against intrastate power and No. 5-ranked Wichita State, but the Shockers took over and held on for a 4-3 victory at Tointon Family Stadium on Tuesday night.

Coach Brad Hill said he was proud of his team, but walks prevented them from winning.

"It was real tough," Hill said. "We played real tough; we just can't walk two guys with the bases loaded."

Wichita State (25-4) got on the scoreboard first in the third inning when third baseman Conor Gillaspie ripped an RBI double off the right-centerfield wall, scoring Andy Dirks, the Shockers' right fielder. The Wildcats (15-16) answered in the bottom of the inning by scoring a pair of runs on a trio of hits off Shockers' freshman starting pitcher Tim Kelley.

K-State junior catcher Rob Vaughn got the Wildcats rolling by smashing a single to left field. With two men on and one out, sophomore left fielder Adam Muenster got a base hit. With his game-tying RBI single, Muenster extended his hitting streak to 16 games.

Junior Jordan Cruz then gave the Wildcats the lead by scoring on a sacrifice fly from third baseman Nate Tenbrink. But the Shockers came back, tying the score in the top of the fifth with a RBI hit by catcher Tyler Weber.

Freshman pitcher Thomas Rooke came on in relief of K-State sophomore starter A.J. Morris, but was unable to keep the game tied as Wichita State scored two more runs on bases loaded walks. The Shockers took the 4-2 lead and never looked back.

"They were sitting 0-2 both times, and we walked them," Hill said. "It's just unfortunate. We don't like losing, but all of our intangibles were there tonight. We just have to build off that."

K-State catcher Rob Vaughn collects his thoughts after the Cats lost to the Wichita State Shockers on Tuesday evening, 4-3. Vaughn was the last player to step up to bat.

The Wildcats added a single run in the bottom of the sixth when Wichita State shortstop muffed a ground ball. In the bottom of the eighth with a chance to tie the game, Cruz hit a drive just short of the left-center wall but a Shockers outfielder caught the ball for an out.

K-State's hopes were crushed in the ninth inning as Wichita State slammed the door on the Wildcats when Vaughn grounded into a game-ending double play.

The Wildcats will complete their short home stand with a three-game weekend series against the Baylor Bears beginning at 6:30 p.m. Friday at Tointon Family Stadium.

NBA age rule about money, not maturity

OWEN KENNEDY

Students usually come to college with hopes of learning and experiencing new things, and if you're lucky, a good job awaits at the end of the four or five best years of your life. However, some skills cannot be learned in a lecture or lab, like athletic ability.

Last season, Greg Oden and Kevin Durant were the two big names in college basketball and were also the first players not eligible for the NBA draft because of a new age restriction. Athletes are not eligible for the draft until they are 19 or one year removed from high school, according to a June 24, 2007, article in the New York Daily News.

The rule is, to say the least, ridiculous. NBA executives say the point of the age limit is to ensure the quality of the league. However, Frank Deford of National Public Radio pointed out on Feb. 7, 2007, that the reasons go much deeper. Deford claimed that if players attend college for a year and make a name for themselves, they would be more marketable when they entered the league (see: Anthony, Carmelo; Beasley, Michael).

The NBA is a business, and the owners and executives who run it are business people. They want to make money, and if they win games along the way, that's good too. When the league starts to talk about looking out for the young players and maintaining a level of maturity, grab the white bread and cheese, because there is no shortage of bologna.

18-year-olds are mature enough to fight for their country, vote, drive a car and buy certain types of firearms but the NBA does not believe an 18-year-old is mature enough to handle an 82-game season. Is a tour of duty in Iraq is nothing compared to the NBA playoffs? Give me a break.

Some athletes who have the skills to compete in the NBA at a younger age cannot afford to attend college for a year while their families struggle to make ends meet. Given the choice of playing a year at K-State or helping his family members for the rest of their lives, I'm sure Beasley would choose the latter.

Besides the players, the rule hurts college basketball as a whole. In 2006-07, Ohio State's men's team featured three freshmen who would declare for the draft by June 2007. The Buckeyes made it to the 2007 national championship game, but after the players left, the team had to rebuild. The Buckeyes didn't even make the NCAA tournament this year.

A coach and an athletic director cannot build a strong program if the best players only contribute for one year. Teams would have no consistency, and once a contender starts losing, coaches start to look for new jobs.

I appreciate everything Beasley did for K-State athletics this year, but my appreciation doesn't outweigh his, or anyone else's, desire or need to make money and compete on a higher level. Be proud, be purple, go make millions.

Late charge propels men to 2nd place in Missouri

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team placed second at the UMB Bank Missouri Tiger Intercollegiate on Tuesday after finishing with the lowest team score in the final round.

The Wildcats, who were in fifth place after the first two rounds, shot a 22-over par 298 and finished five strokes behind tournament champion Indiana. The performance marks the fourth time K-State has finished a tournament in the final pairing this season. The finish also gave the team its eighth top-5 finish of the year, which ties K-State's single season record, set by the 2003-04 squad.

Coach Tim Norris, who has been coaching at K-State since the 1997-98 season, credited the record to the team's consistency this season.

"It seems like we've been in contention in almost every tournament," Norris said. "We've obviously been able to win one, but we've been awful close in some others."

Three Wildcats finished the tournament in the top-10. Sophomore Mitchell Gregson, who shot a one-over par 217, finished third in the individual standings for his team-leading fifth top-five finish of the season. Freshmen Daniel Wood and Kyle Smell both earned their second top-10 finishes of the year. Wood finished eighth with a five-over par 221 and Smell tied for ninth with a six-over par 222.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Freshman Kyle Smell competes in the Jim Colbert Intercollegiate on Sept. 24, 2007, at Colbert Hills Golf Course. Smell tied for ninth at the Missouri Tiger Intercollegiate Monday and Tuesday with a six-over par 222.

Senior Kyle Yonke, who was competing as an individual for K-State, finished tied for 20th with a nine-over par 225. Norris said Yonke earned the spot by defeating redshirt freshmen Ross Geubelle in a hard-fought playoff on Friday, which went into a sudden-death round.

Coach says Wildcats improving at the right time of season

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team capped off its regular season with a 10th place finish at the Canes and Cardinal Classic in Miami Lakes, Fla., marking its best finish of the spring season.

The Wildcats were led by the play of seniors Kali Quick and Hailey Mireles, who each finished with a score of nine-over par, placing them in a tie for 25th.

Quick shot a career-best two-under par 70 in the final round, two stokes better than her previous best, 72, which she had carded five times during her Wildcat career. Coach Kristi Knight said Quick was feeling sick but battled and didn't complain.

"Kali had a really nice final round," she said. "She came out here [Tuesday] morning and really struggled to finish off the second round. When that round ended, she pulled it together, hung in there, and played really well to finish out the tournament."

Sophomore Abbi Sunner also had a strong performance for the Wildcats, finishing just one stroke behind Quick and Mireles in 30th place.

K-State as a team shot a 38-over par 902, which marked the second best score for the Wildcats' spring and fall seasons combined. It is also the best scoring finish the Wildcats have posted in a 54-hole tournament this season.

Knight said part of the reason for the good team score was the score-friendly course.

"It's a golf course where you need four scores of 75 or better," she said. "We came close to that in the first round, but we had one bad hole in each round that made the difference."

The two-day tournament was supposed to begin Monday with 36 holes being completed and the final 18 completed on Tuesday. However, Mother Nature had a different plan as rain halted Monday's play during the second round, causing teams to complete the rest of the second round and the entire third round on Tuesday. Knight said the weather conditions were difficult for every team to handle.

"We handled the conditions well," she said. "We warmed up in the dark [Tuesday], which made for a long day."

Coach Knight said she thinks the team is close to getting to where they want to be.

Olympic torch relay brings out protests, makes sole visit to United States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO – The Olympic torch arrived for its only North American stop amid heavy security Tuesday, a day after its visit to Paris descended into chaos and activists here scaled the Golden Gate Bridge to protest China's human rights record.

Meanwhile, International Olympic Committee president Jacques Rogge said the body's executive board would discuss Friday whether to end the international leg of the Beijing Olympic torch relay because of widespread protests.

The torch's global journey was supposed to highlight China's growing economic and political power. But activists opposing China's human rights policies and a recent crackdown on Tibet have been protesting along the torch's 85,000-mile route since the start of the flame's odyssey from ancient Olympia in Greece to Beijing, host of the 2008 Summer Olympics.

Rogge told the Associated Press he was "deeply saddened" by violent protests in London and Paris and concerned about Wednesday's six-mile relay in San Francisco, where activists feared the torch's planned route through Tibet would lead to arrests and violent measures by Chinese officials trying to stifle dissent.

The flame arrived in San Francisco shortly before 4 a.m. and was immediately put in a vehicle to be whisked away to a secret location, San Francisco Olympic Torch Relay Committee spokesman David Perry said. Security was heightened because several protests were planned before the relay.

No protesters greeted the flame at the airport, but hours later hundreds gathered in United Nations Plaza, a pedestrian area near City Hall, to call on China to cease its heavy-handed rule of Tibet.

Summit to feature civil rights speaker

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development will be host to its fifth Diversity Summit on Thursday.

This year's theme is, "A Time for Bold Vision, Critical Analyses and Strategic Actions."

The summit will be from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Ballroom. Myra Gordon, associate provost of diversity and dual career development, developed the idea of having a diversity summit.

"I felt we needed a large university-wide forum to come together to discuss diversity," Gordon said. "It's a way to bring more people together around a common agenda."

This year's keynote speaker is Mary Frances Berry, the Geraldine R. Segal Professor of American Social Thought and professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania.

She is considered one of the top civil rights leaders in higher education.

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Issues, Dorothy L. Thompson Lecture Series on Civil Rights, and the Black Student Union helped bring Berry to K-State.

"I believe that Dr. Berry can connect all those dots from where we started, to the progress that has been made to our current status, to the future," Gordon said.

Topics she will address include, "Diversity and Excellence: An Essential University Mission in Changing Times," "After White Privilege," "The 2008-2013 Strategic Plan for Diversity" and "The World Ahead."

"She will awaken K-State students and inspire them to be leaders in the cause for racial and ethnic diversity," said Quantrell Willis, graduate assistant for the office of diversity.

Mike Hill, associate professor and chairman of the English department at State University of New York at Albany also will be a featured speaker.

He will look at critical race theory, white privilege studies, post-formalist identity concepts and other related topics.

Willis said he thinks the summit will offer many helpful tips for K-State students, faculty and staff.

"I'm wanting to get practical tools and advice to apply myself toward K-State's diversity level," Willis said.

K-State attorney assists students with law, any other questions

By Tierra Gordon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sitting behind the desk her father used when he was a lawyer and coming from a family with many lawyers and teachers, Sarah Barr, student attorney, knew this was the job for her.

"When I saw an ad for this job, I thought this was for me," she said. "It was a job for me to pull passion and interest together. I love the students."

Barr received her bachelor of arts from Fort Hays State University and her J.D. (Juris Doctorate) from the Washburn University School of Law.

Though Barr cannot represent all students who come to her for help, she said she is still willing to help them any way she can. She said she calls other lawyers and attorneys and asks for advice to help students who she cannot represent.

"I don't like when a student can't be helped by this service," she said. "I try to find someone else like Heather Reed, who is the assistant dean of the Office of Student Life, to help them."

Barr also suggested that students talk to Samantha Oliver, director of consumer and tenant affairs, if they are having tenant problems.

She said she has not faced many obstacles while working at K-State except for not having some desired resources.

"I have no support staff or the time and resources to go to court," she said.

Though she has no support staff, Barr said she enjoys working with her close colleagues.

Reed said Barr was the first person she met when she first came to K-State four years ago, and they have been working together to solve students' problems since then.

Students are lucky to have Barr as their attorney, Reed said.

"I feel like our students are so fortunate to have her to solve any legal issues," she said. "She is so skilled at working with students."

Barr, who has been at K-State since September 2002, said she has not thought about leaving to go back to private practice.

"I envision myself retiring from this job – I can't imagine what would make me want to leave this job," she said. "I love it, I just love it."

Barr said she wants to be more than an attorney to the students she represents.

"They need more than law and to know somebody cares and is there to help them," she said.

should be disposed of, though. Townsend said officials should shred records with sensitive information with a cross-cut shredder if they do not need to be archived.

Last semester, K-State revealed that 128 K-State students' Social Security numbers were exposed on the K-State Web site for about a year.

According to a Nov. 16, 2007, Collegian article, the breach affected international students in the English Language Program whose numbers were on test scores on the English language proficiency test, which were posted on the Web site.

Though this is the only major Social Security number issue K-State has reported, Harvard Townsend, K-State's IT officer, said identity thieves are always looking for ways to get Social Security numbers because they provide an avenue to important private information.

"The general guideline for everyone is to treat your Social Security number as confidential and only give it out when it is absolutely necessary," Townsend said.

Townsend said that if anybody, including a K-State official, asks for a student's Social Security number, that students should ask why the official needs the number and how they plan to use it.

Students should not give away their numbers if it is optional, he added.

When it is required, he said students should write the number down, hand it to the official and then make sure the paper is trashed properly.

Townsend said students should never provide Social Security numbers or passwords over e-mail or phone if they sound even remotely like a scan.

Last month, at least 35 students replied to a scam e-mail request by sending their K-State account names and passwords.

These passwords provide access to personal information like financial records, grades and anything students have access to on their own accounts – this includes Social Security numbers.

Townsend said many people have their Social Security numbers on their computer, even if they don't think it is.

He said an IT officer at another university asked 25 faculty members if they had Social Security numbers on their computer – three said "yes" and 22 said "no."

The IT staff then scanned their personal computers and all 25 computers had Social Security numbers on them.

Townsend said people should encrypt Social Security numbers if they know it is on their personal computer.

Workshop aims to create bonds between junior high girls, science

"Our next event will be our summer workshop, June 25-27," said Susan Arnold Christian, GROW coordinator. "The middle school girls get to come on campus and stay in the dorms with their mentors, see the Konza prairie and visit K-State places in town."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 80 girls crowded around a transparent toilet to see how one of the world's most commonly used devices worked. This was the scene at the opening session demonstration of the Girls Researching Our World workshop Saturday morning.

Nine years ago, a group of K-State female faculty created a think tank for a common goal – to increase the number of women who earn science and engineering degrees. The program they established was called GROW. "The most critical time when girls stop being engaged in these activities is in middle school," said Beth Montelone, GROW steering committee member. "So what we decided to do was devise these outreach activities, which became the GROW workshops and eventually the Saturday workshops."

Montelone said the GROW workshops would bring middle-school girls, sixth through eighth grade, to campus and engage undergraduate women to be mentors.

"If students don't take enough science in high school, they lock themselves out," Montelone, professor in biology, said. "We are also building a relationship with K-State so they think about going to college and perhaps go into science or engineering."

GROW receives a portion of its grant money from the National Science Foundation. The GROW program is run out of the Women in Engineering and Science office. The Saturday workshop, "Everything in the Smallest Room," helped the middle-school girls explore the contributions of scientists and engineers in the bathroom. Each girl was assigned a K-State student mentor for the day.

Some of the day's hands-on activities included going green in the bathroom and taking apart a hair dryer to see how the motor worked. Laura Torres, senior in electrical engineering, said workshops like these are great recruiting efforts.

"It's great to see little girls that are excited, and it's even better to see them go from the middle-school program to the high-school program," Torres said. "The high school program is called EXCITE and we have started to see girls do both programs. That's the transition we usually lose them at. If we can make that connection I think it will be better by the time they need to make a selection of colleges."

The GROW committee plans four activities during the school year and a week-long workshop in the summer.

'Upgrade K-State' allows students to voice opinions

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though technology can be convenient and make the lives of some students easy, many students become frustrated with technological difficulties and learning new systems.

For this reason, K-State Information Technology services will hold a forum at 3 p.m. today in the Hemisphere Room on the fifth floor of Hale Library.

The forum is one of 20 called, "Upgrade K-State" in which students and faculty have the opportunity to be involved in the process of improving K-State's technological services like iSIS, Webmail and other systems.

K-State has recently implemented a new operating system, iSIS, and other technology changes can be expected from information technology services. IT is giving students a chance to voice their opinions about these new and upcoming changes.

"We'd like to understand what is working well and things [the campus] would like to see us do differently," said James Lyall, associate vice provost for IT services.

"Upgrade K-State" was started by K-State Provost Duane Nellis, and vice presidents Tom Rawson and Bob Krause, Lyall said.

"We're engaging the students and faculty," Lyall said. "We think it's important that we engage the campus to their needs."

According to its K-State Web site, upgrade.k-state.edu, the forum's goals include identifying the strengths and weaknesses of IT to improve services.

"We initiated this to begin planning for the next generation of IT services," Lyall said.

The other forums have a specific target audience, which allows specific constituents to voice their opinions including one on the K-State-Salina campus, Lyall said.

"It's been a good experience to hear from a broad range of students and faculty," he said.

'UPGRADE K-STATE'

Staying regular

New yogurts help people improve digestion

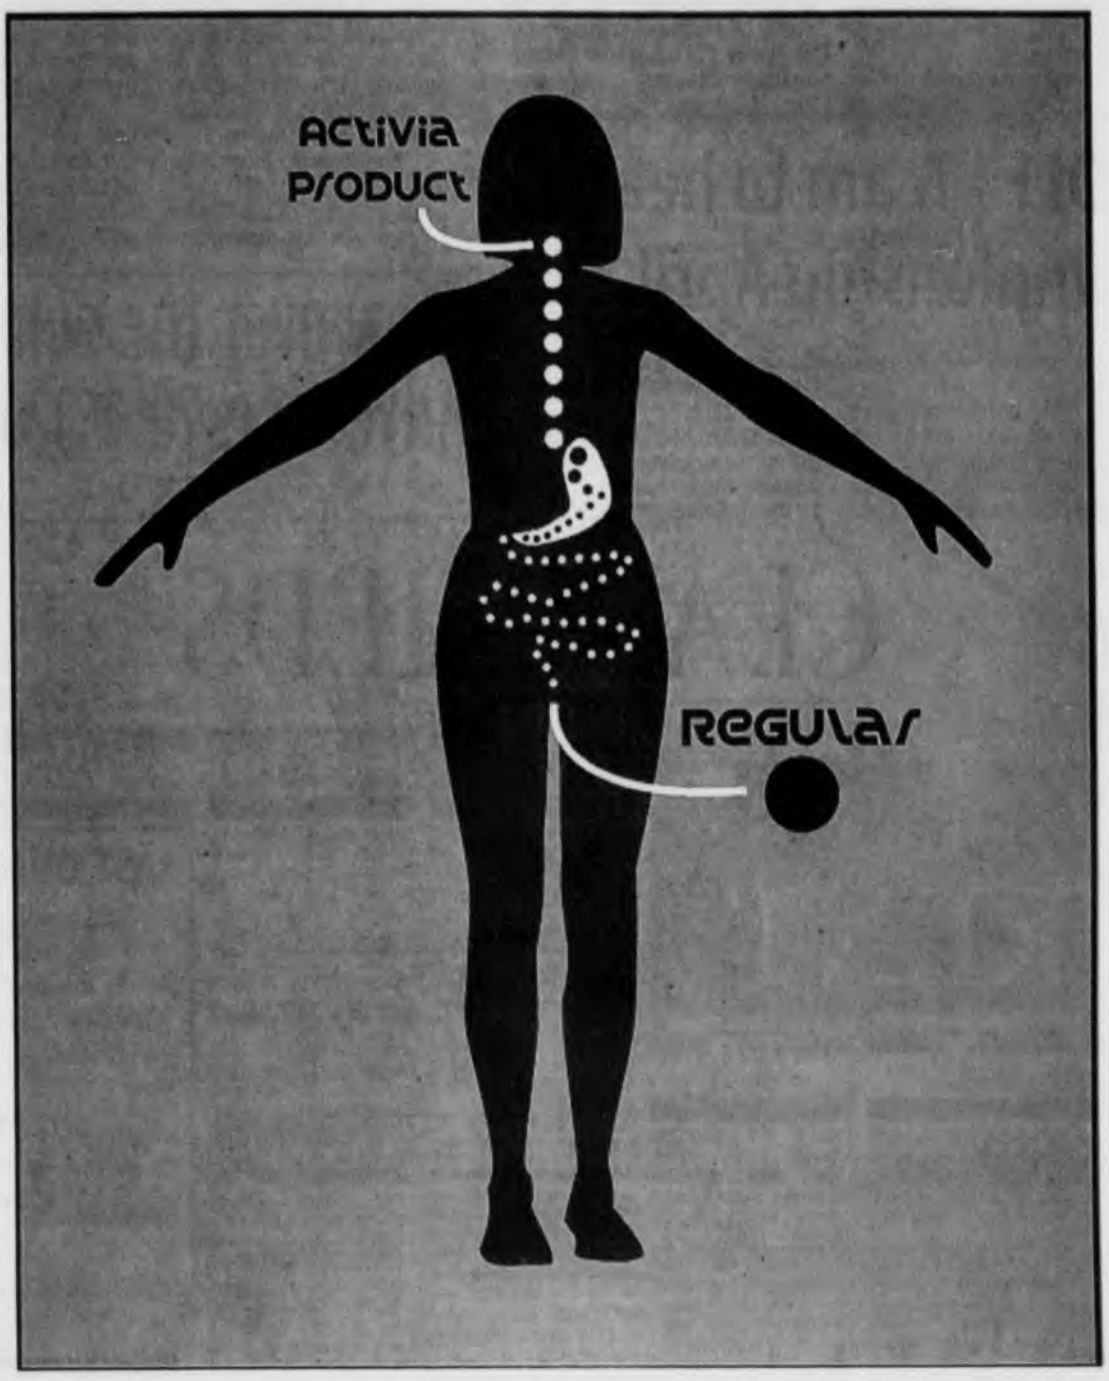

Illustration by Ryan Nickell | COLLEGIAN

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Yogurt has always served as a healthy snack for dieters, athletes and even people just wanting to tide their stomachs over until dinner time.

However, certain brands of the light, fruity snack can now provide relief for people with digestion problems.

Activia, a yogurt made by Dannon, is aimed at helping people regulate their digestive systems and live more healthy lifestyles, according to Dannon's Web site.

Probiotics, which are found in products like Activia, are "living microorganisms that, when administered in adequate amounts, confer a health benefit on its host," according to the site.

Activia also contains bifidus regularis, a probiotic culture (bacteria) that helps regulate the digestive system. For a culture to be considered a true probiotic, it must be safe to ingest and remain alive for the shelf life of the product.

Maya Pettit-Scott, senior in nutrition, said she thinks these products are gaining popularity because people all over the world are becoming more aware of their nutritional status. She also said people want to try new food products rather than taking medicine.

"The probiotics that are in products such as Activia replace natural bacterias in the body," Pettit-Scott said. "It helps the natural bacteria kill harmful [bacteria]."

People also use these products to help soothe upset stomachs and regulate bowel movements. Products like Activia can also assist in stopping uncomfortable bloating and constipation.

"I use it because [I have] Crohn's disease. I take antibiotics, and that wipes out all the natural bacteria," Pettit-Scott said.

Sandra Procter, assistant professor of human nutrition, said while some medicines tend to wipe out friendly bacteria, yogurt contains cultures that will replace them and bring the bacteria back to normal.

"We don't think that consuming bacteria is normal, but it is," Procter said. "If [Activia] would have come out years ago, it would have not made it, but now people see you can eat a specific food that has a healthy effect."

The yogurt section in the grocery store has expanded because of the release of different products that promote digestive health.

Taking digestive health supplements can be beneficial, Procter said, but consumers should not hesitate to do more for themselves if they want.

"Nutrition research says a lot of things seem to work better when eaten in a food form," Procter said. "Typically a dietitian's stance would usually be 'eating regular foods will have more positive affects.'"

Generally, if consumers eat foods like yogurt that contain healthy bacteria, they will benefit more because it is easy to overdo supplement dosage, Proctor said.

She also said all yogurt –not just certain brands– contain helpful bacteria, and eating a variety of fruits, vegetables and whole grains helps the digestive system the same way.

"This specific type of product makes others feel like they will have better bowel movements," Procter said. "But you can get the same thing if you have more fluids, more exercise, get better sleep and have a better diet."

According to www.thenibble.com, products that are helpful for the Digestive System that include probiotics are as follows:

—Yo Plus Yogurts
—Activa Yogurts
—Attune Probiotic Wellness Bars
—Blue Bunny Yogurt
—Kashi Vive Probiotic Digestive
—Yakult
—Ricera Rice Yogurt

BOB DYLAN AWARDED PULITZER PRIZE

Bob Dylan has been awarded a Pulitzer Prize for his contribution to music.

The legendary singer-songwriter was given the Special Citation In Music honor in recognition of his "profound impact on popular music and American culture."

Prize administrator Sig Gissler said: "This award reflects the efforts of the Pulitzer board to broaden the scope of the music prize, and encompass the full range of excellence in American music. It also recognises Mr. Dylan's lyrical compositions of extraordinary poetic power."

This is the first time the Pulitzer panel has recognized a rock musician for the $10,000 prize. Previous recipients of the music award include legendary composer George Gershwin and innovative jazz musician John Coltrane.

COLDPLAY AIDS SLEEP

Coldplay will put you to sleep.

The Travelodge hotel chain has conducted a survey of 2,248 Brits to find out what helps them go to sleep.

According to Reuters Coldplay topped the list of music that acts as the perfect sleeping pill replacement. James Blunt, Snow Patrol, Take That and Norah Jones were also high on the list.

Sleep-inducing music wasn't the only topic polled. Reuters reports, "But those who prefer to be tucked in with a book at night judged celebrity autobiographies as the most effective sleep aid, with the life stories of glamour model Jordan, soccer star David Beckham and Sharon Osbourne ranking at the top."

ONO, MCCARTNEY EMBRACE IN LONDON

Yoko Ono and Stella McCartney kissed and embraced each other at the funeral of 'fifth Beatle' Neil Aspinall on Monday.

Yoko, widow of John Lennon, and fashion designer Stella, whose father is Sir Paul McCartney, warmly greeted each other before the service at London's St. Mary-the-Virgin Church, in Twickenham.

Stella and her brother James were representing their father — who is known to have a frosty relationship with Yoko — as commitments in New York prevented him from attending.

The other surviving Beatle, Ringo Starr, was also absent, though his wife, Barbara Bach, was present to show her respects. Other mourners at the funeral included the group's record producer George Martin, the Beatles original drummer Pete Best and The Who star Pete Townsend.

Townsend sang two of Aspinall's favorite songs, Bob Dylan's 'Mr. Tambourine Man' and 'My Sweet Lord' by the late Beatles guitarist George Harrison.

KING'S KITCHEN

Spring offers great time to get away, cook during camping trip

BRETT KING

As the weather starts to warm up, students want to spend more time outdoors with friends. One of my favorite activities in the spring is to go camping; usually we will head out on a Saturday night with a few cases of beer and spend the night eating and drinking. There is something relaxing about waking up in the morning with the sun shining on your face.

Manhattan offers many opportunities for students to take a weekend trip to fish and not be bothered by cell phones or school work.

Camping food for most students consists of fast food on the way out of town and fast food once again on the way back in, but there are some great, full dinners that can be cooked in the woods. This week I am going to provide recipes for an easy camp rainbow trout with roasted vegetables and cherry cobbler.

When cooking outdoors, aluminum foil becomes your best friend, so make sure you have a fresh, new roll.

ROAST VEGETABLES

INGREDIENTS:

— 2 yellow squash, cut into — 1 inch cubes
— 2 green peppers, cut into 1/2 inch pieces
— 1 yellow onion, cut into eighths
— 2 garlic cloves, minced
— 1 tablespoon of fresh rosemary
— 1/4 cup of olive oil
— Salt
— Pepper

DIRECTIONS:

Place vegetables, rosemary, olive oil, salt and pepper in a large bowl. Stir until all vegetables are covered with rosemary, oil, salt and pepper.

On a piece of foil about three feet long, pour vegetables in a line across the center length of the foil. Lift sides of foil to roll top into a "hot dog" style fold. Roll other sides to close the entire packet. Place the packet next to trout on the heated coals and cook for 15 to 20 minutes.

CHERRY COBBLER

INGREDIENTS:

— 2 cans of cherry pie filling
— 2 boxes of Jiffy yellow cake mix
— 2 sticks of butter, divided
— 1 tablespoon of sugar
— 1/2 tablespoon of cinnamon

DIRECTIONS:

Cover the inside of a cast iron Dutch oven with foil. Fill Dutch oven with cherry pie filling. Cover filling with the two boxes of cake mix. Cut butter into one and a half tablespoon chunks and spread evenly across the top of the cake mix. Sprinkle sugar and cinnamon evenly across the top of the butter.

Place lid on top of Dutch oven and place coals in an equal amount under and on top of the Dutch oven to cook evenly. The cobbler will take 25 to 35 minutes.

CAMP RAINBOW TROUT

INGREDIENTS:

— 4 rainbow trout, filleted with skin and head still attached
— 8 tablespoons of salted butter, divided
— 4 lemons, divided
— Lemon pepper
— Salt
— Black pepper

DIRECTIONS:

Place each trout on a separate piece of foil about one and a half feet long, depending on the size of the fish. Cut each tablespoon of butter in half and smear the inside length of the butterflied fish, a total of two tablespoons of butter per fish.

Sprinkle lemon pepper, salt and black pepper across the inside of the fish, and set aside. Cut two lemons in half and the other two into thin circular discs. Squeeze the lemon halves over the inside body of the four filets. Place lemon slices over the top of the fish, and fold back over the body of the fish.

Create a foil packet with the fish inside. Separate some hot coals from the campfire, and heat the packet for 10 to 15 minutes.

MEN'S GOLF | Weather provides help

"They didn't get done until late Friday evening," he said. "The first round actually ended in a tie. They started over by playing the course backwards. Kyle won with a birdie on the 17th hole."

Sophomore Joe Ida, who has been successful for the majority of the season, struggled throughout the tournament.

He finished in a tie for 25th with an 11-over par 227. Junior Robert Streb also struggled, finishing tied for 50th with a 20-over par 236.

Norris said adverse weather conditions almost ended the final round early.

"The conditions were challenging at best," he said. "We had to deal with lightning and heavy rain in the morning. At one point, they were about a minute away from calling it off."

Norris said the decision to continue playing worked to K-State's advantage.

"We've practiced in similar conditions for reasons like this," he said. "The guys were ready for it. Luckily, they didn't call it off. This is one of the best days we've had this season. Second feels much better than fifth."

The Wildcats will be back in action April 25 when they travel to Trinity, Texas, for the Big 12 Conference Championships. It will be played at Whispering Pines Golf Club, which is about an hour and a half north of Houston. Norris said he hopes the team can continue its consistency.

WOMEN'S GOLF | Team to head to Big 12 Championship April 25

"We're better than we were a couple of tournaments ago," she said. "There are a lot of good things going on, but we are still making some mistakes out there that are costing us valuable strokes."

The Wildcats now will have some time off, after finishing a stretch where they played in four tournaments in four weeks. They will return to action for the Big 12 Championship at Karsten Creek Golf Course Stillwater, Okla., on April 25-27.

"We just need to sharpen up during the next couple of weeks, improve and get ready for the Big 12 Championship," Knight said.

TILLER | AG resisting subpoenas

However, abortion opponents and a prosecutor representing the grand jury have said the subpoena is narrower.

Lee Thompson, a Wichita attorney for Thompson Law Firm, LLC, represented Tiller. Thompson said Tiller already has been the subject of several investigations, and a criminal case filed by the attorney general's office is pending in Sedgwick County, according to an Associated Press report Tuesday.

Bonnie Scott Jones, deputy director of the Domestic Legal Program at the Center for Reproductive Rights, represented Tiller's patients. She said Tuesday that because of the criminal case, patients' privacy rights outweigh the grand jury's interest in obtaining their files.

Petitioners have standing to seek to vacate the grand jury subpoenas because their privacy rights, interests and privileges will be violated if the medical records are produced to the grand jury, according to petition for writ of mandamus for the Kansas Supreme Court.

According to the petition, Doe and Roe, another plaintiff, filed the petition under pseudonyms to protect their identities, preserve their privacy rights and shield themselves against potential harassment and violence.

Kansas Attorney General Stephen Six is resisting a subpoena to his office for edited records from 60 patients because the records were obtained in a previous investigation.

The court set no date for a ruling, but the grand jury's term ends July 7.

Tiller is one of the few U.S. physicians who performs late-term abortions. His clinic was bombed in 1986, and a woman shot him in both arms in August 1993.

K-State's Jardine Apartment Complex is nearing completion of the first of two phases of development.

Phase one, which began in April 2007, added 14 buildings to the complex, and these buildings are located on Jardine Drive.

Kathy Van Steenis, area coordinator of the Plaza Neighborhood in Jardine, said it is difficult to say when development will be complete,

LANDON LECTURE

Director of CIA to speak April 30

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Central Intelligence Agency director Michael Hayden will present the second Landon Lecture of the year at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 30 in McCain Auditorium. Charles Reagan, series chairman and associate to the president, said he pursued Hayden because he has received increased news coverage from the media and scrutiny from Congress.

HAYDEN

He was at the center of the investigation late last year into the destroyed interrogation tapes of two suspected terrorists, and he has been questioned by Congress on the issue of whether waterboarding, which includes pouring water on suspects faces to imitate drowning, is torture.

Arrest made in Manhattan rape case

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An incident involving kidnapping and rape reported in the southwest part of Manhattan on Tuesday led to an arrest, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

According to the RCPD press release, Derrick Myers, 19, confined a woman against her will and raped her. RCPD Capt. Hank Nelson said the victim is a 20-year-old Manhattan woman who knew Myers.

RCPD arrested Myers on charges of kidnapping and rape, according to arrest reports. His bond was set at $100,000. No address was given.

BLOOD DRIVE

The American Red Cross will be on campus today through Friday accepting blood donations. They are in need of donors and are 120 pints short of their projected goal for the week.

Ag students promote team cooperation with Cowboy Olympics event

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Shelby Kooser, senior in animal sciences and industry, propels her teammate, Jodi Mermis, also a senior in animal sciences and industry, during the Wheelin'n Barrelin event of the Cowboy Olympics Wednesday night in Weber Arena.

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students raced across Weber Arena on Thursday night in hopes of being named the new Cowboy Olympic Champions. With different teamwork-based events like hay stacking, wheelbarrow racing and even truck pushing to both watch and participate in, the arena was packed with cheering students and faculty.

"It's about unity most of all," said Mark Maynard, senior in agricultural economics. "It's ag promotions too, but really it's about friendships, unity and a little bit about fun competition."

Maynard said he helped coordinate the Cowboy Olympics as well as other weeklong events that are part of Ag Fest 2008. Maynard said Ag Fest has been an annual event for about 10 years. During the Olympics, each four-person team competes in barnyard-related events for various prizes.

Lyndee Patterson, freshman in animal science, said her team was involved in the event through Collegiate Cattle Women and they were excited to participate.

"They were just telling us about it, and a group of us friends just thought it sounded like a good time," she said.

Patterson's team was one of the few all-female teams that participated in the 2008 Olympics. She said though the team was up against more competitive all-male teams, they were able to have fun while building cooperation skills.

"Being able to communicate made the teamwork even better because we were able to talk and figure out what we wanted to do best and figure out a plan that helped us get through each step the fastest," she said.

Patterson said it's important to learn the significance of teamwork because it enhances every student's college experience.

"It helps you realize how

SHIP MADE OF ICE-CREAM STICKS SAILS FOR ENGLAND

DEN OEVER, The Netherlands — A Viking ship made from ice-cream sticks set sail for England from the Netherlands on Tuesday.

The 50-foot long ship, named after the Norse god Thor, is made from 15 million recycled ice-cream sticks glued together by U.S.-born stuntman Robert McDonald, his son and more than 5,000 children.

"If you can dream it you can do it ... I want to teach children that anything is possible," McDonald said.

McDonald, who was badly injured as a child in a gas explosion that killed the rest of his family, he has loaded his ship with toys and plans to reach London and visit children in hospitals.

He and his crew hope to cross the Atlantic later on the ancient Viking route to North America via Iceland and Greenland.

CHILE APOLOGIZES FOR BIRTH IN HOSPITAL LAVATORY

SANTIAGO — Chile's government on Tuesday publicly apologized after a woman was forced to give birth in the lavatory of a public hospital.

Bernadita Vega, 37, from Peru, arrived at a public hospital in the capital Santiago in labor late on Monday, and waited two hours for a doctor to see her.

Ultimately, her partner helped her deliver a baby boy in a hospital restroom.

"We are very sad about what has happened and worried about this incredible incident, and we are going to take the appropriate measures," Health Minister Maria Soledad Barria told Radio Cooperativa.

"We must check what happened and ask forgiveness from the family," she added.

POSTAL WORKERS ATTACKED BY WILD TURKEYS IN WISCONSIN; WILDLIFE EXPERT SAYS ATTACKS TIED TO MATING SEASON

MADISON, Wis. — Rather than rain or snow, or even dogs, postal workers in a West Side neighborhood near Owen Conservation Park are being pestered by wild turkeys this spring. Mara Wilhite, manager of the Hilldale Station Post Office, said she expected to deal with all manner of issues when she went to work for the U.S. Post Office. But that was not one of them.

"Just when you thought you'd heard it all," she said.

About five to 10 of the birds have been pecking at the postal workers as they make their rounds, and some of the birds have attacked the letter carriers with the sharp spurs on their legs. One of the birds went through the open door of a mail truck and scratched the driver.

Wilhite sought help in the matter from Eric Lobner, regional wildlife program supervisor for the state Department of Natural Resources.

Lobner said the behavior is clearly tied to the breeding season, which started recently and runs through about mid-May.

Color plays an important role in turkey breeding, he said, with the color of the male's head during mating season changes from gaudy blue to white to red. Lobner speculated that perhaps the turkeys are attracted to the red, white and blue postal trucks.

Postal workers were armed with water pistols. But Lober said that, while the squirts of water worked for a while, the turkeys now seem accustomed to it.

Union hopes to improve financial situation

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Take a moment and think about the K-State Student Union. Think of all the times you've stopped by Caribou Coffee, Subway or the Cat's Den for a snack on campus or a meal between evening classes. Now, imagine if those readily available food and drink privileges were taken away. Imagine pulling a long night in studio and not being able to stop by the Union for an energy drink, power bar or cup of coffee – the image becomes much more bleak.

The Union – a non-profit organization – is in debt and has been for a while. However, to confidently get out of the red, the Union would need to completely operate as a business, said Bernard Pitts, Union assistant vice president. But in doing so, Pitts said all the afternoon and late-night food privileges would be taken away – food would only be offered during peak hours.

"Can you envision a university that has students here in the late afternoon and evening and they don't have the ability to get food somewhere?" Pitts asked. "It's not business savvy to have the food court open between 2:00 and 6:00 p.m. and have other [food services] open in the late evenings. The numbers that we serve at those times do not even come close to paying the bill to having that service open ... but you gotta understand; we're not a profit organization. Our mission is to operate and provide service to the university, even if it's not in our best financial interest."

Though the Union has not been turning a profit, Pitts said it isn't fair to use the term "debt" to describe the facility's financial situation. He said the word connotes that the organization is not financially viable and owes people or organizations substantial amounts of money.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL SOLUTIONS:

— Create a partnership with Housing and Dining Services to offer students more options on their meal plans that would offer usage of retail food outlets in the Union and create more foot traffic for this venue
— Extensively review food service within the K-State Student Union after one year, with or without any of the components being implemented in this proposal
— First right-of-refusal contract for all catering events on campus with a minimum sales transaction of $1,000
— Providing new food concept for current Union Station area
— Ensure that the Union receives the RFP for the upcoming Athletic concession bid process
— Review Kansas State University's policy on the Institutional Support fee and all entities that fall under its jurisdiction
— Raising funds in cooperation with the KSU Student Foundation including solicitation of naming rights to all Union rooms, honored gifts and other revenue options
— Alcohol policies revisited and possibly providing a proposed change to the Board of Regents

"But this is the real world," he said. "If we were in the red and we didn't pay our debts, we'd be closed a long time ago."

Pitts said the Union generates enough funds through student and community Union purchases to pay its expenses each year – just like a business. However, because the Union is constantly working on renovations and equipment updates and improvements, it has only turned a profit a few times since it opened in 1956.

Pitts said K-State students decided to donate $5 each year to go toward the operation of a Union facility in the early 1940s. Enough was raised in '56 to open the Union, and since then, its upkeep has been funded almost solely by students.

Jackie Thoman, assistant director of Business Affairs for the Union, said 26-27 percent of semesterly student privilege fees are allocated for the Union, which go toward repairs, replacements and preservation. Only 1 percent of its operating budget comes from the university, and none of it comes from the state. Because of this, Thoman said the Union is not accounted for Consumer Price Index (CPI), which averages a 3 percent inflation rate each year.

Businesses funded by the state receive CPI and, as a result, have a funding increase based on inflation rates.

"You go to the grocery store; you go to the gas station," Thoman said. "You know how inflation is effecting your pocket book. It's affecting our pocketbook the same way, but we're not getting recognition of that in our fee structure. So, consequently, we have to solve that additional [inflation] cost of $60,000-78,000 somehow – either reduce our services, or increase retail pricing to the consumer."

Pitts said if the Union was able to keep up with CPI through privilege fees, it wouldn't have a problem. But because both the possibility of decreased Union services and increased student fees are bleak, Pitts said they are trying a new route to help pay for improvements.

Nick Piper, student senate chairman, has worked with both Pitts and Thoman as well as Pat Bosco, associate vice president, the Student Governing Association and numerous others to research the Union's revenue for the past five years and design a proposal to help its financial situation. What resulted was the "Proposal of The Special Committee to Review the Kansas State Student Union Funding Structure."

In the proposal, Piper, senior in financial management, said the Union's biggest financial problem was identified as its food services. He said for the past 11 years, the facility has had a $3.2 million deficit. To adjust this, Piper said the proposal has outlined eight solutions for the Union.

"The biggest step is the creation of a partnership with Housing and Dining," he said.

This partnership, which was recently established, includes the creation of a student Kat Cash Card – a card students will be able to put money on for Union meals, much like the student I.D., that will give students a 10-percent discount off all food outlets in the facility including those independently owned like Subway and Caribou Coffee. It will also eliminate the seven-cent bank service fee, which is charged to students each time they purchase in the Union with a debit or credit card.

"What it will do is generate more foot traffic," Piper said. "We hope to bring in more students, help eliminate that bank service fee and allow students more flexibility in the Union with the card."

Though the details of the Kat Cash Card are still being worked out, Piper said he is optimistic of the financial benefits and the future improvement of the Union's financial situation as a whole.

"To watch [the card] go from paper to actual reality has been awesome," he said. "Once one of the solutions happens, then [we hope] three or four others will also be put into place, and we will have a more financially stable Union."

Researcher addresses hidden history of UFOs

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Robert Hastings, an unidentified flying objects researcher and lab analyst, gave a speech on UFOs Wednesday night in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Robert Hastings, unidentified flying objects researcher and lab analyst, said the U.S. government is trying to cover up the phenomenon of flying objects in a speech on Wednesday evening in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

"I'm not seeking to convert skeptics into believers," Hastings told the audience. "In my opinion, public has a right to know facts that UFOs do exist."

Hastings presented a 25-minute slide show, based on previously top-secret CIA, FBI and Pentagon classified documents and information gained from the Freedom of Information Act.

"What you are about to see here may look like science fiction," he said. "The only taking for admission this evening is an open mind."

In his study, he responded to the views of critics who deny the existence of aliens and admitted that some UFO stories are hoaxes. Hastings said some objects that are not man-made, nor natural phenomena, nor hallucination, do exist.

According to the researcher, aliens try to gain a level of familiarity with humans by periodically visiting Earth. However, people don't need to panic, because the aliens' intentions are not hostile.

Hastings has researched nuclear weapons-related UFO reports since 1973 and interviewed more than 80 Air Force and nuclear plants personnel. According to Hastings' slide-show presentation, aliens' space-crafts tend to appear near nuclear objects more often than in other places, making UFOs a National security matter. Several students said they picked up interesting facts they had never heard before at Hastings' presentation.

"I always found extraterrestrial things interesting, so I came here to learn something more about it," said Lauren Porterfield, sophomore in public relations.

Jorge Mendoza, senior in biology, said he believes in the existence of UFOs. He said he has never seen one but would like to.

"It was interesting to see the documents and to know who the government doesn't tell information about it," Mendoza said.

Besides documents, the researcher provided names of physics and astrophysics scientists who study UFO issues and credible Web sites like www.fufor.com and www.cufos.org where people can find information.

"It is not a mainstream thing," said Chris Jones, Union Program Council Forums Co-chairman. "Some people may be interested in it, some not, but we wanted to do something that captivates people's attention." The event was sponsored by the UPC.

The presentation concluded with a question-and-answer session.

Credit crunchdown

Government not helping consumers during rough financial period for most

MARK WAMPLER

America has been caught with its hand in the cookie jar as the consequences of the credit crunch continue to pile.

Our unrealistic living standards have caught up to us, and the facts directly affect college students.

According to a USA Today article on April 6, credit woes are going to squelch a lot of the available money on which college kids depend on. The most money that freshmen will be able to borrow from the Feds next year is a laughable $3,500, according to the article.

The private loan pond also has been drying up. The National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, a representative of private schools, found that 43 percent of schools surveyed said that one or more lenders on their "preferred lender" list have stopped offering private loans. In addition, lenders that still offer loans have tightened their standards, the article said.

"To get a private loan, most students will need a co-signer with excellent credit," said Mark Kantrowitz, publisher of FinAid, in the article.

The government is largely to blame for this financial crisis. How does it expect to teach its citizens financial responsibly when it cannot do so itself? The United States spends a remarkable 4 percent of its gross domestic product on its defense budget – a total of $545.3 billion, according to NATO statistics. This is more than Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Canada, Spain, Turkey ... (you get the point), spend combined. Instead of encouraging fiscal responsibility in light of the Sept. 11 attacks, President Bush urged Americans to support their economy by buying more products.

Several weeks ago, the U.S. government was forced to bail out Bear Stearns, one of the largest investment banks in the world, as it secured the financial backing for the bank's buyout. The deal was kind of like students calling their mother to pay for the parking ticket they can't afford – only this parking ticket cost $30 billion.

Nate Schmidt | COLLEGIAN

In a testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, senior officials defended their decision by saying they had no choice but to act for the broader good of the economy to stave off greater economical problems the bankruptcy of Bear Stearns would have caused, according to an April 4 article in the New York Times.

The government had not taken the necessary steps to prevent the financial problems that are now dogging the market. It now sets a dangerous precedent of coming to the rescue of irresponsible companies. It cannot rescue everyone.

In a telling statement, Sen. Charles Schumer, D-NY, said in the article, "How do we guard against another Bear Stearns? Was someone asleep at the switch? It is a long road until our system of regulation catches up with our financial systems."

It is exactly that lack of regulation that creditors are extremely worried about. As a record number of Americans lose their houses to foreclosures because of defaulted loans, banks are losing billions of dollars from people who can't pay them back.

In an unsurprising move of catch, the government is working on a legislative effort to provide $300 billion in federally guaranteed loans to help refinance the mortgages of as many as 1.5 million homeowners at risk of default, the New York Times article reported. Guess where that money comes from? – your paycheck. Perhaps President Bush might want to rethink his previous statement:

"America, help our economy and save your money. Buy the smaller house that you can afford and stop putting things on credit."

'Cool' trend helps to improve environment

JESSICA HENSLEY

Go green. All the cool people are doing it.

It's true – going green, once the domain only of tree-hugging liberals, is quickly becoming the latest trend to sweep the nation. Out with the hippie environmentalist and in with the chic 20-something shopping for organic potato chips with Go Green reusable tote. Because, as one such tote proclaims, "Green is the new black."

The question is, though, will this new fad and all its components have any effect on the environment? The answer is yes, according to a recent U.S. Environmental Protection Agency report. Plastic bags, like those used by most when grocery shopping, can take up to 1,000 years each to completely decompose, according to the EPA. Something as simple as switching to reusable shopping bags has the potential to greatly reduce our effect on the environment, as the average family accumulates up to 60 plastic bags in only four trips to the grocery store.

In 2005, the U.S. National Academy of Sciences, along with 10 other scientific academies, released a joint statement claiming, "The scientific understanding of climate change is now sufficiently clear to justify nations taking prompt action."

Several scientific books have been written this year that claim the environmental crisis is so serious that if humanity goes on as we have been without significantly cutting overall greenhouse gas emissions, it actually could lead to collapse of civilization a la "The Day After Tomorrow." ABC News asked United Nations Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon if he thought this assessment of the crisis was as reactionary and over the top as it sounded in a 2007 press conference.

"I think that is a correct assessment," he said. "People say that action should have been taken yesterday. If we take action today, it may not be too late."

It is an undeniable fact that humanity has had a negative effect on the environment and our planet. It is also an undeniable fact that unless we do something about it, we are in for an environmental disaster, the likes of which never have been seen before.

The good news is, there is plenty we can do as individuals to lessen our effect that doesn't involve giving up our cars. Simple things like recycling, using paper instead of plastic and purchasing environmentally-friendly products can go a long way toward helping our environment. It's as simple as walking the few extra feet to the recycling bins available all over campus.

So go green. Not only is it good for the environment, it's the cool thing to do.

This is Manhattan. Take your Kansas garbage somewhere else.

Five. Five dollar. Five-dollar foot-long.

I was about to call my dad and ask him for money, but then I remembered the Stuni guy.

God hates Fred Phelps.

I just realized the reason it's so cold in Manhattan on Tuesday was because hell has frozen over and the Jayhawks won the championship.

Who has four laptops? Honestly.

So the girl next to me just farted, but she couldn't hear it because she had headphones in.

Just think: If KU could win 46 more national titles, they could catch up with Oklahoma State. Of course, Oklahoma State didn't have to cheat to get theirs.

Instead of going to class this morning, I called the Fourum and went back to bed.

I drink so much Mountain Dew, my blood type is MD.

Hey, to that white car that I keyed this morning: Learn how to park inside the lines, buddy.

No lie. I'm playing "Duck Hunt" right now.

My best friend's girlfriend is the clingiest woman ever and is the stupidest woman ever.

Aqib Talib just got burned again.

Jesus loves Justin Nutter.

To the tall, young blond-haired man in the crappy blue car who yelled at me on the southeast side of the Union late on Friday afternoon: You're a creep and a total weenie. Stop coming into the bowling alley in the afternoons. Your game is God-awful. You couldn't beat a bunch of kindergartners.

I think I have a phobia of crosswalks.

Wait, the girl had four laptops?

I got chlamydia and had a pregnancy scare all in one week, but I still love her.

I'm sorry to say that there are quite a few KU fans here. I'd have thought that our alma mater meant something.

Organic chemistry is soul-destroying.

I'm Wilford Brimley. Test your blood sugar, and test it often. My grandchildren don't call. My knee hurts. Woman, get over here.

This meeting is now called to order. Does that sparkle with everyone?

Playing golf in the rain is the worst idea anyone has ever come up with. Columbia, Mo., sucks.

What ever happened to guys asking girls out on dates?

To the two girls riding one bike by Umberger Tuesday night: You made my life.

Dear Michael Beasley, that could be us next year.

After reading you, I'm now stupider.

What's sex without love? It's sex.

I'm a born-again virgin.

So, I was in Austin, and I saw a bunch of girls wearing rain boots. Man, that's 10 times better than girls wearing Ugg boots here at K-State.

I ate ice cream for dinner, and then I had dessert.

It feels like the Battle of Bunker Hill is happening in my lower abdomen. That can't be good.

A Kansas team wins a national championship in sports, and the Collegian does not print a single word about it, not even in the sports section. Is K-State that big of a hater?

To the guy outside of Rathbone: Thanks for the insight on steam.

To the guy that wanted to know why we dog on KU: Let me spell it out for you. One, because we're K-State fans, and two, because KU cheats. Duh.

I feel so alone right now. Nah, I'm just joshing ya. I got you, Fourum. Always got you.

Today's Cryptoquip made me giggle like a little school girl.

Scott Girard: iSIS is not an operating system. It is an application. You should look at your sources before reporting your stories.

Hey, Brett King: They went on strike so that they would affect the prices and people would listen to them, instead of thinking they were ignorant truckers.

Pedestrians: There is not a crosswalk between Throckmorton and Ackert.

TO THE POINT

Editors share their picks for best 'Office' quotes

The Collegian's editors celebrate the return of "The Office" by remembering our favorite Dunder Mifflin quotes.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Owen Kennedy – "You can't fire me, I don't work in this van," Dwight Schrute.

Brandon Steinert – "This is an environment of welcoming, and you should just get the hell outta here," Michael Scott.

Alex Peak – "I enjoy having breakfast in bed. I like waking up to the smell of bacon – sue me – and since I don't have a butler, I have to do it myself. So most nights before I go to bed I will lay six strips of bacon out on my George Foreman Grill. Then I go to sleep. When I wake up, I plug in the grill. I go back to sleep again. Then I wake up to the smell of crackling bacon. It is delicious. It's good for me. It's the perfect way to start the day. Today I got up, I stepped onto the grill and it clamped down on my foot. That's it. I don't see what's so hard to believe about that," Michael Scott.

Jonathan Garten – "Hey bra'. I've been meaning to ask you. Can we get some Red Bull for these things? Sometimes a guy's gotta ride the bull. Am I right? Later skater," Creed.

Joel Jellison – "That's what she said," Michael Scott.

Sara Evans to come perform at K-State

Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Country singer Sara Evans will be at Bramlage Coliseum at 8 p.m. Saturday for the Changing Lives Campaign thank-you concert.

Julie Lea, KSU Foundation vice president of communications and development services, said the Foundation will sponsor the concert as a thank you for the donors and volunteers in the Changing Lives Campaign.

The Changing Lives Campaign lasted for seven years and closed in December. The concert's purpose is to celebrate its success. The campaign's goal was to raise more than $500 million for university needs, which include student scholarships, faculty development and updated learning environments; and this goal was met.

Lea said they chose to bring Evans for a concert because of her growing popularity.

"It was a group process, and her name kept coming up as someone the students would be interested in," Lea said. "We were happy to bring her for the thank-you, appreciation concert."

Students last week, Lea said, were e-mailed again so they could get another opportunity to obtain tickets. There are 7,000 seats available for donors and contributors to the K-State PROUD, All-University and Changing Lives campaigns.

Molly Hamm, Student Foundation vice president, said this concert is important because it is allows the Foundation to thank the donors and contributors who make a difference to K-State and the student body.

"It allows us to continue to build unity among the student body and alumni," Hamm said. "When people are thanked, they are more likely to give back because they feel accomplishment and pride in what they did and will give back in the future."

International fashion show promotes different cultures

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nathaniel LaRue | COLLEGIAN

Tirhas Gebre, junior in industrial engineering, models traditional Ethiopian women's clothing Wednesday evening at the World Friendship International Fashion Show. The World Friendship group has existed in Mahattan for 40 years.

Diverse audience members engaged themselves in the performance, clapping their palms to the steady beat of the Vietnamese Rice Drum Dance.

An International Fashion Show, part of K-State's International Week, showcased native fashions from 26 countries presented by models of all ages Thursday evening in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall. The event was sponsored by the International Coordinating Council and the World Friendship Organization.

"You can get the story behind the dress and what it was influenced by," said Lenka Hadamova, graduate student in medicine and president of ICC. "Events like these are important because you get hands-on experience of the culture."

The show started with an introduction to World Friendship, an organization that provides a base for international women, and a celebration of its 40th-anniversary. World Friendship has 130 members and focuses on teaching English as a second language.

This year's fashion show's theme was "Getting to Know You." European wear was modeled first in front of a German flag power point background. The fashions shown were divided into regions within continents. The continents displayed were Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, and North America.

Students signed up for the show and wore their own clothing, Hadamova said. Those not wanting to model their outfits but wanting to show their culture's dress found models to represent their culture.

Accessories, including flags, headdresses, flutes and fans, were added to some of the outfits to give a more authentic taste to the show.

"I got to see countries I'd never heard of," said Maria de Jesus, graduate student in English Language programs.

Other parts of the show included a performance on the dombyra – a two-stringed instrument – Japanese singing, a Vietnamese Rice Drum Dance, a bluegrass clogging dance and a flag ballet that included ribbon twirling.

Simple traditional dance moves and greetings were also incorporated with the modeling, so audience members could learn more about each culture.

"Events like these broaden our horizons and help us become more tolerant with other cultures," de Jesus said.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Senior leader

Regan has hopes for team title

By Cole Manbeck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Though senior Michelle Regan has won a tournament as an individual, she hopes to finish her career at K-State with a team victory at a tournament.

Michelle Regan's career has been highlighted by two top-2 finishes individually, but something has eluded her and her teammates during her four years at K-State.

"I would really like to get a team win before I graduate," Regan said. "It's something that we would really like to accomplish."

Regan, senior in business administration and marketing, is running out of time to make that dream come true. One tournament remains in her career before the NCAA Regionals – The Big 12 Conference Championship.

"It's gone by so quickly that I haven't had time to think about how this is almost over," she said. "I just take it one tournament at a time, and we are just trying to make it to regionals."

Regan came to K-State from Prairie Village, Kan., a suburb of Kansas City, after graduating from Bishop Miege High School in 2004.

Last fall, Regan won her first collegiate individual title when she placed in a tie for first at the Bronco Fall Invitational in Boise, Idaho. She followed that performance with a second-place finish at the Edwin Watts/Palmetto Invitational in South Carolina. Other accomplishments include 14 top-20 finishes and a career-best score 67 at the Susie Maxwell Invitational in 2006.

She didn't grow up a K-State fan but said she was drawn to the university for other reasons.

"Coach [Kristi] Knight came out and watched me play," she said. "I came on an official visit, and I really liked the golf course, and it was close to home, and I was close to my family. I was really impressed with the campus and how nice and welcoming everyone was here."

Regan said she has enjoyed her time at K-State, and a large part of that can be credited to Knight.

"Coach Knight is one of the best coaches in college golf," she said. "She's a really good mentor. She's helped me on and off the golf course. We are really lucky to have a coach who is so supportive."

Knight said Regan's ball-striking ability and distance are her biggest assets.

"Michelle has improved every year, and she's a very energetic and fun-loving player," Knight said. "She plays her best golf when she plays with joy and energy. Michelle likes to laugh, and she's very much a team-spirited individual – always cheering on her teammates."

Knight said the future is bright for Regan, particularly because she is such a good athlete and a great competitor.

"She hits the ball a long ways," she said. "When she plays her best, she plays well in the short game. She has a chance to get her game to the next level if she continues to improve."

What the future holds for Regan is hard to tell, but she said she has an idea in place.

"I would like to pursue golf and give it a try after graduation," she said.

But she would like to put those plans on hold for a few more tournaments. K-State will play in the Big 12 Championship April 25-27 in Stillwater, Okla.

"We have so much talent on this team, we just need to play up to our abilities," she said.

Defensive players making noise at workouts

MIKE DEVADER

With the sad end of another college basketball season, the focus for college fans everywhere now shifts back to football. The K-State football team is in the middle of its spring practice session, and there are Wildcat newcomers and returning contributors who already are making their presence known during drills.

Olu Hall, a linebacker who transferred from Virginia and sat out all of last year because of NCAA rules is one of those players. It shouldn't be a surprise to fans that Hall is making a lot of early noise; back in high school at Robinson (Va.) High, he made 93 tackles and 11 sacks as the No. 7-rated weakside defensive end by Rivals.com. At nearby Hargrave Military Academy, he was regarded the sixth-best Prep School player in the nation.

Another reason to get excited to watch Hall fly around the football field this season is the number on his jersey.

No. 56.

This could be a good omen for Wildcat fans because we should all remember the last K-State linebacker who wore 56 was Terry Pierce, and he turned out to be pretty good. Hall has a lot of work to do to fill the shoes of Pierce, but at 6-foot-3, 232-pounds, Hall looks eerily similar to the monster that once roamed the defensive backfield at Wagner Field.

Though Pierce didn't get a chance to play in a 3-4 defense, he was still able to cause havoc on opposing offenses.

Hall, on the other hand, gets more freedom in this defensive system.

He will line up somewhere in the backfield and could come from any angle to get to the quarterback. Even coach Ron Prince gives a hint at how scary Hall could be for K-State this season when he talks about the linebacker.

"He can really get off the ball and really attacks the line of scrimmage," he said.

Hall will get the opportunity to make plays and get the Wildcat defense back on track this year, but he's not alone. The swarming K-State defense that played great the first half of the year last year will be getting its "rover" player back with the reemergence of senior linebacker Antwon Moore, who sat out most of last season with an injury.

K-State's own version of Pittsburg Steeler Troy Polamalu, without the hair, is back from his knee injury. Fans should remember the chaos he caused in the Auburn Tiger's backfield in last year's season opener. Though Moore only sacked Tiger quarterback Brandon Cox once, Moore had him running for his life the entire game.

K-State lost the game but looked like a great team. All of that began to fall apart when Moore hurt his knee the following week against San Jose State.

That was then, and this is now.

Moore is back and so should be fans' excitement of possibly watching another terrorizing K-State defense in 2008.

Classy Cats to compete for national title in Florida

By Jose Garcia
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's Tuesday morning, bright and early. All the flights are booked, the bags are packed, and the tickets are punched. Oh, and the Classy Cats' free bid to the National Cheer Association and National Dance Association Collegiate National Championship is also taken care of.

The team was only one of two teams this year to receive a fully paid bid to the national competition in Daytona Beach, Fla.

The road to the championship has not been a total walk in the park since winning the free bid. The women have been practicing six days a week for three hours a day since camp ended in August.

Tuesday, the team headed to Florida, and expectations of a solid finish are definitely on a few of the women's agenda.

"We want to walk off the stage knowing we left it all out there, and placing in finals would be an amazing experience for us all," said Abby Towner, freshman in business management.

This year, only one returning dancer has previous nationals experience.

Lori Wright, junior in business management, said the team is hoping to place as well as gain valuable experience.

"Not only is placing important, but with the team being so young, I think the

Self hot commodity to KU, OSU

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – If big bucks are needed to fend off Oklahoma State and keep Bill Self as the Jayhawks' basketball coach, wealthy Kansas donors seem ready to reach for their wallet.

Immediately after Kansas beat Memphis State in overtime Monday night for the NCAA championship, speculation intensified that oil and energy magnate T. Boone Pickens might be coming after the Jayhawks' coach on behalf of Oklahoma State.

An Oklahoma native who played for the Cowboys and was once their assistant coach, Self remains popular there.

Pickens, who once gave Oklahoma State's athletic department a $165 million donation, could probably outbid any single Kansas booster. But with an extensive alumni base and a love of athletics, the Jayhawks are not without financial firepower of their own.

'That's what she said'

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last fall brought about a rollercoaster of emotions for "The Office" fans. We got four one-hour episodes followed by a few regular 30-minute shows and then ... nothing.

We laughed, we cried, and then we laughed until we cried. Then we spent months crying because – thanks to the writers' strike – we were without our Scranton family. Like a lost child reunited with its parents, we will have our "Office" back tonight.

Here's a quick recap of what's been going on in Season 4 with all the characters:

MICHAEL & JAN: Jan lost her job at Corporate. She confessed her true feelings for Michael, and after the firing, moved in with him. Because Jan has posh taste, she wanted to renovate Michael's condo and insisted they trade in their two cars for a Porshe. Little to anyone's knowledge, Michael cannot support her expensive demands, and he was forced to take a second job as a night telemarketer. During the last episode, Michael went to Jan's deposition when she sued Dunder Mifflin for $4 million for wrongful termination. Though briskly rehearsed for his comments, Michael still managed to botch his statement completely.

ANGELA & ANDY: After Dwight mercy-killed Angela's cat Sprinkles, Angela ended the relationship. Angela has a moment of humility when she reaches out to Pam to tell her what happened with her cat, but before too long, she returns to her tightly wound self. Putting her stringent personality aside for a moment, Angela agrees to start seeing Andy, whose teenage-esque hormones serve only to strengthen his lack of maturity. His crooning and moon-walking skills eventually impress and persuade her enough to allow some "necking" action.

PAM & JIM: After three seasons of relentless flirting and mutual heartbreaks, Pam and Jim finally cut off their significant others and established their relationship. And as we all expected, they are naturally adorable lovebirds. They even have a weekend getaway at Dwight's beet farm bed and breakfast. During the retreat, they play along with his accommodations, enjoy the farm activities and request a bedtime story from Dwight. However, in the middle of the night, while trying to sleep in their irrigation-themed room, they hear strange moaning sounds coming from Dwight's room.

KELLY & DARRYL: Kelly started off the season with the announcement that she's pregnant with Ryan's child. Big lie. Ryan's not impressed, and he even tries to outsource her job to India. Within no time at all, Kelly and Darryl have sparked an interest in each other. Kelly makes an effort to trump Ryan by swapping spit with Darryl during an office meeting. She becomes more supportive and protective of their relationship when Darryl and Jim face off in a ping-pong match.

DWIGHT: Without Angela in his life, Dwight erupts with emotion. When Pam and Jim stay the night at his family's farm, they hear Dwight mourning his breakup. Once Angela starts seeing Andy, Dwight is plagued by Andy's stories about her. Despite the heartrending hurdles of bouncing back from a breakup, Dwight maintains his

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Fifth year: Simple love is easy to find, but true love escapes many

Have you ever been in love?

That's a bit personal, but I'll play your games.

ADAM REICHENBERGER

I probably fall in love a good seven or nine times a week. Take this week, for instance: I fell in love with a girl at the library on Tuesday. She was just sitting there eating pancakes. She doesn't know it yet, but I'm going to marry her.

Standing in line at Wal-Mart on Sunday, I overheard a girl excitedly say to her friend, "Pie does sound good." Love.

At a recent baseball game, I overheard a girl singing "Shu Ba Da Du Ma Ma Ma Ma." I'm telling you right now: If you're a girl and you know that song, I love you.

At one time or another, I've been in love with all my sisters' friends. Having older siblings certainly has its perks, especially when their friends realize you're not just a little boy anymore. I'm going to a wedding in a couple weeks, and if I can ever get my sister, Emily, to give me their phone numbers, I'll be contacting every one of them.

Let's see, in my tenure here in Manhattan there have been four "Dara's girls." The first one – that was love. Math girl, Applebee's girl, Tad's girl, all of my old Paraguayan neighbors – love.

When I went to Louisville last summer there was this bartender at the North End Café where I ate every day – definitely love. And let us not forget, Tiger Meat girl down in Auburn, Ala. When she said "war damn eagle" in that sweet, southern accent, it melted my heart.

Jessie Money. I saw her in concert with her father Eddie. Her, too – love. I hear she's on some reality show now, which I find rather unfortunate.

Then there's the Spanish woman in "Spanglish," and Janis Joplin, of course. Marilyn Monroe, Audrey Hepburn, Wendy Peffercorn and the entire cast of "A League of Their Own" minus Rosie O'Donnell. My roommate's sister, but she's engaged now so that's fading fast. Oh, and Jeanine, my friend Justin's girlfriend too.

But really, truly in love? I guess I just don't know. I suppose since I know I'm out of it, it's difficult to say whether or not I was ever in it. I know I thought I was once – turns out it was just a side effect of the medication I was on. Speaking of which, I thoroughly miss my Percocet, but that's definitely a road that needs not be traveled again.

Love certainly is an elusive bugger. I always just sort of thought I'd stumble into it, so I guess I don't really think about it. It's certainly not something I'm against by any means, but at the same time it's not like I'm sitting around playing Phil Collins records all day.

The Long Beach Dub Allstars said it best: "All I ever wanted was someone to let me live my own life." Though, like I've said before, if she can bake a pie and doesn't talk that much, then I could probably love her. Waffles too – waffles are good.

No, I'm not that harsh, but I will say this: If she's not willing to go on 14-hour trip to nowhere on a last-minute whim, then we probably wouldn't get along too well anyway.

"PROM NIGHT" (PG-13)

A dark secret among a group of children comes back to haunt them in the form of a vengeful killer on their prom night.

"STREET KINGS" (R)

Tom Ludlow, a veteran Los Angeles Police Department vice detective, sets out on a quest to discover the killers of his former partner, Detective Terrance Washington. Captain Wander's, Ludlow's supervisor, duties include keeping him within the confines of the law — and out of the clutches of Internal Affairs Captain Biggs. Ludlow teams up with a young robbery homicide detective to track Washington's killers through the diverse communities of Los Angeles.

"CHAOS THEORY" (PG-13)

Frank Allen, celebrated author of the bestseller "The Five Minute Efficiency Trainer," has perfected the art of living via a foolproof system of timetables and index cards. In fact, his daily "to do" lists are legendary. A man known for playing it safe, Frank doesn't believe in spontaneity. Every choice he makes is deliberately designed to contribute to a well-ordered, predictable life. But life, as he soon learns, never adheres to a strict schedule. Frank's wife, Susan, and seven-year-old daughter, Jesse, find his obsession charming in small doses, but as a steady diet, it can be very frustrating. One morning, Susan attempts to loosen her husband's scheduling stranglehold by adding 10 minutes to his day. But, by setting the clock backward instead of forward, she inadvertently unleashes a series of mishaps that turn his meticulously ordered life upside down.

"SMART PEOPLE" (R)

Professor Lawrence Wetherhold might be imperiously brilliant, monumentally self-possessed and an intellectual giant — but when it comes to solving the conundrums of love and family, he's as downright flummoxed as the next guy. His collegiate son won't confide in him, his teenaged daughter is an acid-tongued overachiever who follows all too closely in dad's misery-loving footsteps, and his adopted, preposterously ne'er-do-well brother has perfected the art of freeloading.

"THE VISITOR" (PG-13)

In a world of six billion people, it only takes one to change your life. Sixty-two-year-old Walter Vale is sleepwalking through his life. Having lost his passion for teaching and writing, he fills the void by unsuccessfully trying to learn to play classical piano. When his college sends him to Manhattan to attend a conference, Walter is surprised to find a young couple has taken up residence in his apartment. Victims of a real estate scam, Tarek, a Syrian man, and Zainab, his Senegalese girlfriend, have nowhere else to go. In the first of a series of tests of the heart, Walter reluctantly allows the couple to stay with him. Touched by his kindness, Tarek, a talented musician, insists on teaching the aging academic to play the African drum.

Manager, bouncer enjoys job responsibilities

By Whitney Noe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Matt Cox, a manager of Kite's Bar and Grill, grew up in Manhattan, and shortly after his high school graduation, started working at Kite's. He said he has worked every position at Kite's from bouncer to disc jockey, with the exception of server.

It was around midnight. The dimly lit sports bar smelled strongly of cigarette smoke and beer, and was packed with many rowdy people standing shoulder-to-shoulder.

Suddenly, a loud argument breaks out between two men. Matt Cox immediately gets off his stool, strides toward the scene and faces the two individuals. He exchanges warnings with them both, threatening to throw them outside if they don't settle their issues. Obviously intimidated by Cox's 6-foot-one-inch, 220-pound muscular build, the two offenders nodded toward each other and walked the opposite direction. Cox had once again succeeded at doing his job.

Cox is one of the managers at Kite's Bar and Grill in Aggieville. Before becoming a manager one year ago, Cox got his start two years before that as a bouncer at Kites's. Even though Cox said Kite's has a more laid-back atmosphere than some of the other surrounding bars, he still runs into a few problems with customers.

"Two months ago, there was a group of us kicking about six guys out for fighting," Cox said. "One of the guys started peeing on our patio, so I grabbed him to leave and as soon as I did, I got hit in the face by one of his friends. I had to get six stitches under my eye."

Cox said he's been hit on more than one occasion, but it is just an expected part of the job. He said he still enjoys maintaining a safe environment for Kite's customers.

Cox said he does more to keep the chaos under control as a manager than when he first worked as a bouncer. He also said since he has worked at Kite's for several years, it's easy for him to tell right away who is going to cause problems. Cox said he has become an expert at handling situations before they get out of hand.

"The body language on people, how someone's standing or how they're talking to each other really tells a lot," he said. "The biggest fight we've ever had was about 10-15 guys on our dance floor. In a situation like that, you've just got to get them out, and we usually try to stop them before anything gets physical."

Cox also said he utilizes a three-step process that comes in handy for a two-person argument.

"If it's two guys, you want to just try to talk to them," he said. "You never want to automatically grab them and throw them out. I will ask them once to stop, second time I will tell them 'Hey you gotta go,' and the third time it's 'If you don't leave now, I will take you out.' That usually works."

Having lived in Manhattan his whole life, Cox is familiar with the Aggieville atmosphere. Even though he was considered a "big boy" in high school and was part of the wrestling and football teams, he had no idea he would start bouncing at the age of 19.

"I was actually majoring in mechanical engineering [at K-State] my freshman year after high school," Cox said. "But money became an issue and I wanted a job. I applied at Kite's and have been working there ever since."

Working at Kite's was the first job Cox ever had. He is employed full-time and works an average of 55 hours per week. He usually goes into work a little before 9 p.m. and stays until the bar closes around 3 a.m. He said the hours really leave him with an irregular sleep cycle, but he doesn't mind the hours and takes several naps during the day.

Cox plans on returning to K-State to finish his studies. He said he would like to open a bar of his own. But for the moment, he is sticking to what he loves – working with friends, meeting hundreds of people on a weekly basis, collecting huge stacks of fake IDs and always having a good time.

impervious salesmanship and demeanor in the office. And of course, his peculiar antics are still up to par.

RYAN: At the end of Season 3, Ryan received the phone call informing him of his new position as a corporate leader for Dunder Mifflin in New York. A rise from temp to corporate boss in only a few years is a lofty jump for Ryan, but he has great plans to revolutionize the company with technology. And not to forget, along with the new title, Ryan's fanfare is also shown by bearded stubble.

MEREDITH: In the season premiere, Michael accidentally hit Meredith with his car in the parking lot and broke her pelvis. After a brief stint in the hospital – complete with an awkward visit from her coworkers – Meredith is back at work, adorned with a large cast that is strangely reminiscent of a large diaper. She cornered Jim and made him sign her cast.

you can use other students to help you through your college career, and this is kind of a good way to exemplify that," she said.

Rebecca Farha, senior in animal science and co-chair of the Olympics, said the winners' prizes included gift cards to area business and free pizza. Though awards were only given to first and second places, the event's real purpose was to get students involved and working together, she said.

JARDINE | No time table planned for second phase of construction

as it is a two-phase process.

Steenis said there is no timeline for the completion of phase two because they need to allow for market research. Phase two could result in the building of additional apartments, depending on need for residential areas in Manhattan.

Residents living in Jardine are participating in focus groups to help with the construction of phase two.

Deborah Kohl, coordinator for Jardine community development, said the focus group will inquire about residents' expectations, dislikes and needs.

Jenna Parks, sophomore in apparel and textiles, lives in Jardine and said she likes how different its apartments are compared to other area apartments.

"It's really cool when you have people over and the apartments look like nowhere else," Parks said.

Some of Parks' dislikes include the low durability of the appliances and the long distance from her apartment to her mailbox.

However, these minor setbacks have not prevented Parks and other students from already reserving apartments in the new complex additions.

Jardine has traditionally served as housing for international students and students with families for decades, but much of the complex is now open to all students.

There are residents in buildings five and seven, and more will move into building eight on Aug. 1 while the tower is being constructed, said Deborah Kohl, coordinator for Jardine community development.

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Apartment 302, which includes a large vault in the living room area and a balcony extending along all the bedrooms, has one of Jardine's several uncommon floor plans.

While touring building eight, Kohl mentioned the courtyard would have seating and a fountain that can also be used as a fire pit. Movies also will be shown on occasion in the area, she added.

At the top of the tower, viewers can see as far as Tuttle Creek Dam and Reservoir, as well as Snyder Family Stadium.

Building eight also will include a computer lab, academic rooms and residential areas. However, Kohl also said several living amenities, conveniences and prices still are being determined for the building.

The other new additions also will offer special features from residents. For example, building five will have a restaurant and convenience store.

In building six, the three-bedroom apartments will feature large balconies shared by the bedrooms. Kohl said this area will be convenient for entertaining guests.

Steenis said phase one is nearing completion, and phase 1.5 will follow. This phase will include completion of shelf space – including office and class space – in three of the buildings in phase one. The phase includes work on an existing building as well.

"We will start the high renovations on Building D, which is one of our traditional buildings that has been around since the 1960s," Steenis said. "This includes gutting out to the building and doing renovations to the interior, so the construction in that phase will be much more contained."

interested in what he has to say about these and other issues," Reagan said.

Even if students have not been reading the headlines, Reagan said they should come to see an important U.S. political figure.

"They should take advantage of every one that we bring because they'll never get a chance to see them in person again for the most part," he said. "These are the people who make a difference in their lives."

Gen. Hayden is the first CIA director to speak in the Landon Lecture Series and the 151st speaker since the series started in 1966.

The highest-ranking intelligence officer was named director in May 2006.

Reagan said he was close to getting Hayden's predecessor, George Tenet, to speak at K-State.

The lecture will be followed by a question-and-answer session with the audience.

experience will make it even better for future and current Wildcats," Wright said.

The Classy Cats attended a National Cheer Association camp this summer prior to the start of fall classes. The team was aware going into the camp that only two teams would be leaving camp with a free trip to Florida.

Division 1-A schools from all over the country attended the summer camp. Getting one of the free trips allowed the girls to compete and contend for titles with other big-time schools.

With the entire team staying in Manhattan for the majority of spring break, the trip to Florida is not only a competition but a definite vacation for the team.

"I think it is extremely important for the girls to go down there and see more competition on a Division-I level and that we are not only there to compete but have a great time and bond as a team," said assistant coach Loralea Wood.

Army wives cope with deployments, classes

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Concise text messages and two-minute phone calls are not conventional ways to maintain a strong and passionate marriage, but for some Army wives, that's all they need.

While their husbands can be deployed for several years at once, and they only have time to communicate with their wives a couple times a day, some Army wives said they believe the geographical distance and low communication level they have with their husbands has actually strengthened their marriages.

CALL OF DUTY

"Being an Army wife differs from being a wife in a conventional marriage because we are forced to be geographically single for so long," said Janelle Chasson, K-State graduate, Manhattan resident and Army wife. "We have to have an especially strong level of trust and communication to make things work. We have to maintain that physical love even though we're miles away."

Chasson, who has been married to her husband, Justin, for four years, said the satisfaction of constantly supporting her husband's goals and reuniting with him each time he comes home are the rewards she cherishes and would never give up.

"There are moments when I wish he wasn't in the Army because I really miss him," Chasson said. "I wouldn't change his career for the world though, because that would be

Soldiers welcomed by anticipating crowd

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Families and loved ones of 300 Fort Riley soldiers made loud screams and tears of joy as they waited anxiously to greet the troops Thursday evening in Fort Riley.

The homecoming ceremony brought home 300 of the anticipated 3,400 troops that are coming home from Iraq, where they have been deployed for the last 15 months.

"The ceremony will give you chills," said non-commissioned officer and Sgt. 1st Class Jake Newman.

Newman has been in the military for 12 years. He has been to a few ceremonies but said this was special and more personal because of its small size.

"This is the first time I've seen it done this way," he said. "As the troops come back, they're able to get to their families right away."

The ceremony included a mass formation of the troops, a brief prayer, a playing of the national anthem, a brief speech, and then the reunion between the troops and the families.

"Having been there myself, I know exactly what it's like to see your family there," Newman said. "It's definitely a high-emotion event."

The anxious crowd was filled with a variety of people, including students from K-State. Members of Alpha Delta Pi made signs that welcomed the troops and were present at the ceremony for those troops whose family or friends weren't present. The sorority was one of the few Greek organizations who came out to support the troops

"We've been doing this for about two years now and we just thought it would be great to come out here and greet the troops who don't have anyone to greet them," said Denise Heideman, junior in art education and member of Alpha Delta Pi.

Heideman said she was overcome with emotion when she saw the families reunite. She said it had been such a long time and said she couldn't imagine being away from loved ones for that amount of time.

K-State Relay for Life to feature local bands, human bowling

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of students and Manhattan residents will participate in one of K-State's largest all-nighters tonight.

The 2008 K-State Relay for Life will begin at 6 p.m. and continue until 6 a.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium, said Molly Bostwick, junior in math education and online committee chair for this year's Relay.

"We have about 56 teams registered, so we're pretty happy with that turnout – it's more than last year, I know that," Bostwick said.

Relay for Life is a nationwide annual event sponsored by the American Cancer Society which raises money and awareness for cancer research, according to the ACS Web site.

The evening will begin with 40 cancer survivors walking an honorary lap around the track in the Survivors' Walk and continue with food, fundraising activities and performances from local bands, Bostwick said. Relay participants will continue the event by making sure one member from each team is walking on the track at all times.

Area businesses will provide food and beverages for walkers who have raised $100 or more. Other activities that will continue throughout the night include Kool-Aid pong tournaments and human bowling.

The K-State women's basketball team will also auction off an autographed basketball, and other individual teams will be running booths to raise money for cancer research. This money also goes toward K-State's Relay's fundraising goal of $65,000.

"[The Relay committee is] pretty confident that we're going to meet our goal," Bostwick said. "We've already got $40,000."

One of the Relay's traditions is a luminaria ceremony that celebrates cancer survivors and remembers its victims. Luminarias, paper bags decorated with the names of survivors and victims, line the track and are lit up with tiny candles placed inside them. This year, more than 350 luminarias were sold for $10 each and will be lit at 9 p.m., Bostwick said.

This year's Relay for Life is groundbreaking, she said, because it is the first year Riley County is recognizing K-State's Relay as equal to the county's event.

"This really is a big step," Bostwick said. "They are finally noticing that we include the Manhattan community, too – not just college students."

Bostwick also encouraged students and Manhattan residents who have not already officially registered as part of a team or donated money to attend the event.

"We definitely just want people there, in the environment," she said. "Then if people are interested, they can donate or get involved next year."

There will be a booth set up outside Memorial Stadium throughout the event taking donations for cancer research and selling luminarias. For more information, visit the K-State Relay for Life's Web site, events.cancer.org/rflkstateks.

Open House in need of volunteers

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Open House planning committee is sending out a call for more volunteers. More than 20,000 prospective high school students and their families are projected to attend K-State Open House on April 19.

"There is not a limit to how many volunteers we need," said Andrea VonFeldt, sophomore in communications sciences and disorders and special events chair. "We could really use people to help us in the entertainment portion and other areas. The need is endless."

K-State's Open House is a daylong event leading up to Higher education civil rights activist encourages diversity ed during K-12

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fight for civil rights in the mid-20th century was exceptionally important in higher education, but over the years the fight has slowed down, said a leader in higher education civil rights Thursday morning in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Keynote speaker Mary Frances Berry, professor in history at the University of Pennsylvania, addressed diversity along the lines of race, gender and class as points of discussion for K-State's fifth-annual Diversity Summit.

In her speech, "Diversity and Excellence: An Essential University Mission in Changing Time," Berry encouraged the more than 100 K-State faculty members and students in attendance to take more risks in making a change to educate people about cultural differences and sensitivity. She said though a change has taken place since the civil rights movement, more work is still needed.

"After Dr. King's death, there was a move to push more black students into predominantly white universities, so the protesting would decrease," Berry said.

The purpose of the summit is for the university and its constituents to create a dialogue about current issues affecting diversity and the future. The theme of the year is "A Time for Bold Vision, Critical Analyses and Strategic Actions."

One issue Berry stressed was the misuse of the word "diversity" in place of "affirmative action," because affirmative action has the connotation of a "dirty word" in society.

A woman in the audience asked, "What kind of action should take place to promote diversity?" Berry answered that there needs to be a K-12 program to educate children about diversity.

"We worry too much about the school to prison pipeline than the school to university pipeline," Berry said. "If K-12 pipelines are built, [students] will be better prepared to come and will more than likely stay at the university."

After Berry finished her speech, there was a question-and-answer period. Most of the questions revolved around politics, leadership roles and diverse voices being heard.

When the session was finished, Berry left the stage to a standing ovation.

Many audience members said they enjoyed the message and walked out energized to make a change.

"I got a historical perspective of race, civil rights and affirmative action, but we still haven't accomplished where we need to be," said Juanita McGowan, assistant dean of diversity for the College of Arts and Sciences and director of the American ethnic studies program.

Tiffany Powell, diversity coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said she was moved by Berry's words of encouragement to her during the question-and-answer portion.

"The issue of diversity has a historic place," Powell said. "If people don't receive knowledge about diversity, it will continue to create friction between people."

Other activities during the summit included a speech titled "After White Privilege" from Mike Hill, department chair for English at the State University of New York-Albany; K-State associate provost for diversity development Dr. Myra Gordon's presentation on "Adding Value to Tomorrow's World"; and other question-and-answer sessions regarding diversity in higher education.

STUDENT GOVERNING ASSOCIATION

New Senate has 1st meeting

By Michael Champlin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last night was the first session of the 2008-2009 Student Senate.

Former Student Senate Vice Chair Amy Schultz was elected to Student Senate chair by a vote of 40-9-7. She was sworn in by former chair Nick Piper, senior in finance.

Schultz, junior in premedicine and biology, spoke about increasing student awareness, building a community within Student Governing Association, and being more than a manager of the senate by getting personally involved in the issues SGA addresses.

The other candidates included Taylor Symons, junior in speech and communications, and Katie Beye, senior in political science.

Symons, who is beginning his fourth term in Student Senate, spoke of his experience in SGA. He wanted to expand public relations of SGA, including more community service and diversity.

Beye spoke about creating a member orientation for new senators and expanding the SGA ambassador program. She also highlighted her experience in parliamentary procedure.

Elections for Senate Vice Chair also took place. Emily Haug, junior in political science, was the only candidate nominated and won unopposed.

Adam Tank, junior in microbiology and leadership studies, was sworn in as Student Senate attorney general. The attorney general serves as head of the judicial branch of SGA, according to the agenda.

Nominations for Senate intern coordinator included Anne Oliver, sophomore in pre-physician assistant, and Danny Unruh, sophomore in food science. Unruh won by a vote of 29-26-1.

During the open period representatives from the KSU Theatre Department demonstrated sword-fighting techniques that will be used in the upcoming performance of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, and the senate interns presented Emily Haug, former intern coordinator, with a gift to show their appreciation.

FEEDBACK

Collegian addresses Subway, Dean Bosco

Friday's To The Point column features the editorial board's favorite and least favorite Fourum comments throughout the week. The board members will state their opinions about selected Fourum comments.

"Dear Michael Beasley, that could be us next year."

Yes, it could, except K-State isn't on probation for paying its players.

"Five. Five dollar. Five-dollar foot-long."

We cannot support a deal that replaced the ridiculously cheap meatball sub on Tuesdays.

"To all the people in the library who use those computers to check Facebook and their e-mail: go somewhere else. People actually have work to do there."

Students should go home to check social networks like Facebook or MySpace. What if your home is the library, though? Then you do have the right to check these sites at your newfound home.

"Has anyone ever noticed that Dean Bosco looks a lot like Al Pacino."

We're very happy that someone finally pointed this out. The resemblance is astounding. Also, Bosco will always be "Top-5" in our book.

A racist says what?

Hints of racism not behind everybody's actions, words

MARQUIS CLARK

I always wondered how the United States would move past its racist history. After all, a country that says "all men are created equal" and stole the vast majority of its land, allowed and profited from hundreds of years of slavery, participated in overt violent racism and segregation, turned its back on the lynching of thousands of citizens and continues to exploit the labor of developing countries has a lot of work to do.

So, how could it be improved? For one, we could systematically analyze the ways in which racism undergirds our basic institutions and either deconstruct and rebuild those institutions or undertake a long process of acknowledgment and atonement, perhaps. Or we could have a well-thought-out national discussion while making a concerted effort to include the voices of the people who suffered most in these unequitable systems. Wait, I've got it call everything anyone ever says "racist," and hope we get so tired of hearing it we all forget about it.

According to Fox News, a Barack Obama supporter has given up her role as a pledged delegate after the campaign found it "unacceptable" that she requested that children in her neighborhood "quit playing in the tree like monkeys." Not withstanding that monkeys climb in trees and children have been known to howl and throw feces, the comment was deemed racially offensive because the children were black. Not only was she asked to resign from her position, but the police were called and a $75 ticket was issued.

An "ism" is simply defined as a belief system. Whether it's sexism, racism or absolutism (the belief in an absolute being), they are not innately problematic. Most people understand that only when an "ism" combines with power does it pose a threat to non-believers. It is the institutional power behind racism that gives it teeth. It is the systematic enforcement of prejudice, not the private expression of bias.

Real racism, as seen in the U.S. version of slavery, is the sin for which Abraham Lincoln believed God had condemned America. Real racism – like the killing of innocent U.S. citizens, institutionalized racism in the justice system and the sub-human treatment of blacks in the American South – are the sins for which Jeremiah Wright believed God had condemned America. Call him inflammatory, absolutely. Call him prejudiced, absolutely. But he is not a racist.

If the only obstacle that people of color in America had ever faced was a few words of hate spoken in churches by powerless men or being called monkeys for climbing in trees, there would have been no need for the civil-rights movement. We would all go to class on Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday and Obama would be just another politician who'll probably fail to live up to his promises.

I think each generation has an opportunity to decide for itself how it will address the very real racist history of our country. There is not an option to hope that if we ignore it, it will go away. Racism is woven into the fabric of our country. Black and white alike benefit daily from the exploited labor of people of color. We enjoy the protection of institutions built on the backs of oppressed classes. Our great material prosperity is the by-product of exploitation and greed.

Will this generation be the ones to stop ignoring and misnaming racism and take a critical look at the way it influences our lives and informs our experiences? I hope we will take this opportunity to decide for ourselves what racism means in a 21st-Century context. All it takes is for both black and white Americans to stop hurling meaningless rhetoric at one another and to take an honest assessment of this country its past, the present and our future.

'Predator' pedophiles deserved TV humiliation

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Chris Hansen, an NBC correspondent famous for his job as host of Dateline's "To Catch a Predator," will speak at K-State on April 16. "To Catch a Predator" is a controversial news segment where online child "predators" are caught on tape when they visit a decoy posing as a preteen girl or boy who the "predators" believe they had sexual conversations with online.

There has been controversy surrounding Dateline and the police departments that set up sting operations at the decoy's house. Many of the men captured on camera claim coercion or false arrest, saying they were lured into Dateline's trap. A March 11 International Herald Tribune opinion article titled "Televising Humiliation" by Adam Cohen stated, "In November 2006, a camera crew and a police SWAT team descended on the Texas home of Louis William Conradt Jr., age 56. The 'To Catch a Predator' team had allegedly caught Conradt making online advances to a decoy who pretended to be a 13-year-old boy. When the police and TV crew stormed Conradt's home, he took out a handgun and shot himself to death." Conradt's sister is now suing NBC for more than $100 million, stating "To Catch a Predator" is an "out-of-control reality show."

There have been many other issues surrounding the show, from a fired producer challenging its ethical standards to families of the accused claiming the show has destroyed their lives. Most of the accused have had charges brought against them and some have served jail time or probation. While they and their families claim "To Catch a Predator" has destroyed their lives, it is difficult to find sympathy for someone who had the intention to have physical sexual contact with a young minor. Several of the men who are caught are old enough to be the decoy's father or grandfather, and the show does nothing but expose these men for what they are sexual predators.

While many of the accused say they are innocent, the fact is that convicted pedophiles are highly likely to commit sexual crimes again. According to the Counter Pedophilia Investigative Unit, "Sex offenders [are] about four times more likely than non-sex offenders to be arrested for another sex crime after their discharge from prison."

Chris Hansen and Dateline have done a great service by using the medium of TV to raise awareness of the sheer number of men who are trolling the Internet for pre-teens and child pornography.

About 20 percent of all Internet pornography involves children, and the number of child porn images has increased 1,500 percent, according to a survey done in 2003 by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and reported on the Web site of watchdog group Enough is Enough: Protecting our Children Online.

It is easy to believe these men's lives are destroyed when their face and name are shown on national TV. However, maybe they should have thought about that before deciding to physically act on their fantasy. Child porn is illegal worldwide, and 35 states have the "age of consent" for sex set at 16. This is because children do not have the mental capacity to fully understand sex and consent to it.

Exploiting others – especially children – for sexual gain, whether it be through child pornography or convincing a 13-year-old girl to do something sexual, should never be justifiable. Dateline's exposed predators should own up to their attempted crimes and accept punishment instead of further embarrassing their families by trying to prove their innocence.

Students feast at Filipino fiesta

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students found a taste of what a Filipino neighborhood party is like Thursday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The event, called "Barrio Fiesta," was planned by the Philippine Student Association as an interactive way to promote understanding of the Philippine culture. It was sponsored by the Union Program Council and concluded K-State's celebration of Philippine-American Heritage Week. The event also offered free Filipino food, dance performances and karaoke.

Rommel Sulabo, president of PhilSA, said the fiesta is a religious holiday usually celebrated between April and May in the Philippine islands.

Haidee Ramirez, member of PhilSA, said Barrio takes place to honor the patron saint of the Philippines in Catholicism.

"There is a lot of food and participation. The people will go to each other's houses, eat, and do lots of dances. It is about thanking God for the bounties of harvest," said Sulabo, graduate student in animal science.

Alex Wilson, senior in psychology and multicultural co-chair with Union Program Council, said PhilSA approached them with the idea, and she said she thought it sounded "spectacular." The groups then decided to co-sponsor the event.

The first dance, called Tinikling and involving movements with bamboo sticks, was the national dance of the Philippines, said Shayne Sulabo, graduate student in food science and member of PhilSA.

The second dance was the Pandango Al Oasioas, which includes balancing candles. Sulabo said this is a traditional dance of fishermen and the fishermen's wives.

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Carol Shanklin, interim dean of the graduate school, inspects a table filled with Polynesian crafts at the "Barrio Fiesta" that took place Thursday in the Union Courtyard. The fiesta was the final event of Philippine-American Heritage Week.

The event was part of UPC's "Uniting People and Cultures" programs, and Wilson said she hopes students learn from events like this one.

"I think the Uniting Cultures program provides a better understanding and a better insight into other people's cultures," she said.

Anneliese Byram, fifth-year student in interior architecture, said she was lured to the event by the good smells of the food.

"I come by these often. I like to see what is going on," she said.

CAMPAIGN EFFECTS ON CAMPUS

Under Obama's plan, students would get cash back for community service

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students across the country have done community service for student organizations, class requirements and just for pure personal enjoyment. Presidential candidate Barack Obama wants to give back to those students who have willingly given back to their community by rewarding them a $4,000 tuition reimbursement in exchange for community service.

"I don't want to send another generation of American children to failing schools," said Sen. Obama, D-Ill., at the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner in Des Moines, Iowa. "I don't want that future for my daughters. I don't want that future for your sons. I do not want that future for America."

Obama's tuition reimbursement plan is called the American Opportunity Tax Credit. According to Obama's campaign site, the plan will reward students who have completed a total of 100 community service hours for that year. The tax credit is fully refundable, so students who come from low-income families would still be able to receive it. To make the tax credit available at the time of enrollment, Obama would use the prior year's tax data to deliver the credit.

"I support any initiative that makes it possible for students from any economic circumstance to participate in community service," said Mary Tolar, associate director of educational leadership.

Tolar is part of the Leadership Studies program and is heavily involved in the community service aspect of it.

In her department, students not only participate in community service, but they create projects as well. Tolar said the department has created a new program called the K-State Volunteer Center for Manhattan that serves to connect students to the community.

"The center is new this year and the grand opening is April 29," she said. "Funding initially started through [the Student Governing Association], so students at K-State have initiated this campus community partnership."

Tolar said many people have discussed whether or not the service that will be paid for is truly service. But she said most forms of community service can make a strong impact on a student's development throughout college.

"Higher education has a civic mission and because of that mission it is important to have public investment in the service of college students," she said. "This is one way to both address supporting college students while also promoting civic learning."

Nick Piper, senior in finance, is part of the leadership studies program and performed community service in New Orleans last year as an intern through the office of civic leadership.

"I just got really excited because it was an opportunity to give back to a community who was devastated by Hurricane Katrina," he said.

Piper spent his spring break last year rebuilding different communities in New Orleans. He said the best experience was the amount of appreciation and feedback from those he helped in the New Orleans community. Piper said he agrees with Obama's effort to promote community service through tuition reimbursement and said it should increase the amount of students who are active in their communities.

"I think it's an idea where it will get students involved in their community," he said. "It's not necessarily the monetary base, but it's what the entire community will be receiving in that process."

Piper has done a substantial amount of volunteer work in Manhattan and said community service is beneficial for students and their community.

"Leadership has always been a major factor in my life," he said. "Not only is community service an opportunity to build my resume, but it's an opportunity to work with faculty who is dedicated to building leaders and to really get involved in other people's lives."

K-State tennis team ready to battle top Texas schools

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team (6-10, 2-5 Big 12 Conference) faces an unenviable schedule this weekend.

On their three-day trip through Texas, the Wildcats will travel to Intercollegiate Tennis Association No. 33 Texas A&M on Friday and No. 20 Texas on Sunday. Coach Steve Bietau likes the fact his team will have a chance to play some of the best teams in the ITA.

"These are difficult matches, but not dramatically different than Baylor," he said. "I would rate Baylor, Texas and A&M as the top three teams in the conference and three of the best teams in the country. They are difficult situations the reason I like them is that it gives particularly our freshmen but everyone an opportunity to see what the best teams look like and how to compete against them."

The Aggies (12-6, 6-1) are led in singles played by freshmen Christi Liles and Morgan Frank. Liles has posted a 24-7 record and Frank boasts a 14-3 mark. Young talent also leads the Aggies in doubles as Frank and fellow freshman Stephanie Davidson lead the team with a 14-2 record. The duo is unbeaten in Big 12 play at 7-0.

At the Aggies' last home match, attendance was 517 people at the George P. Mitchell Tennis Center, which is significantly more than the Wildcats are used to playing in front of. Bietau said he is looking forward to his team playing in front of a large crowd.

"At A&M, they'll get a whole bunch of guys in the stands, and if you miss your first serve, one of them will yell 'What time is it?' And the other fifteen will yell it's double-fault time," he said. "It's just a little more rowdy-type atmosphere, and I like it. I think it's good for college tennis. I think the atmosphere around tennis in general is you have to sit there and be quiet and politely clap your hands if you see something you like. I think there's more to it than that it can be a lot whole more fun, and it is in these places."

A lively atmosphere is also expected in Austin on Sunday. The Longhorns (12-4, 6-0) have only dropped matches to perennial powers like Northwestern and Arizona State. Sophomore Vanja Corovic, senior Courtney Zauft and sophomore Sarah Lancaster lead the Longhorns in singles play with unbeaten conference marks. The continuity in play continues in doubles where the duos of

Track team to head to El Paso, Texas; Wichita

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second time in two weeks, the track and field team will split up and send athletes to two different meets. On Saturday, the Wildcats will compete in the UTEP Invitational in El Paso, Texas, and the KT Woodman Invitational in Wichita.

Most of the 15 Wildcats going to El Paso are jumpers and sprinters, while many throwers and middle-distance runners will be in Wichita. K-State has competed at the UTEP Invitational several times in the past and has been successful. Coach Cliff Rovelto said the heat and altitude help athletes in the speed and power events, which is why the team competes there.

The KT Woodman Invitational should be a good opportunity for the throwers to get multiple attempts in competition, Rovelto said, but it could be derailed by the weather.

If the weather is bad, the meet could be moved to Sunday or canceled. If the meet is canceled, the Wildcats will have to wait for next week's Kansas Relays to compete.

"Hopefully we have good weather," said sophomore Sam James, who will compete in the 800-meter and 400-meter dash at the KT Woodman. "That's the thing with the outdoor season we are always chasing good weather."

Rovelto said it is a strain on the coaches when athletes travel to two different meets in a weekend.

However, he said it is necessary to make sure all the athletes are at a meet that is conducive to success in their particular event.

"There is virtually no venue, no weather conditions that are going to be ideal for everyone it just doesn't happen," Rovelto said. "If it's hot, it's good for the sprinters and the speed/power events, but it's not very good, obviously, for the distance runners. If it's real windy, it might be good for the horizontal jumps, but it's not so good for the high jumps. Rarely is it going to be ideal for everyone."

While sending different groups of athletes to different venues is hard on the coaches, most of the athletes are too focused on their own event to be preoccupied with the rest of the team.

"I think the majority of the kids are pretty focused on what they need to do individually," Rovelto said. "And quite honestly, that's what we emphasize. We want them to focus in on what they need to do to get better."

When the team splits up, most of the athletes travel with the same groups they practice with every day, which also makes splitting up easier for the athletes.

"For the most part you see everyone that you practice with," James said. "It's not like football where the whole team can practice at once. There are about three or four teams that practice together within the team."

For a few of the Wildcats headed to El Paso, this weekend will be the fourth consecutive week of extensive travel.

The team has gone to meets in Tempe, Ariz.; Sacramento, Calif.; Austin, Texas; and now El Paso, over the past month.

"It's kind of crazy," said freshman sprinter Tiara Walpool. "It's nice to go and see different places, but coming back from places like California makes you so tired."

Baseball team looks to bounce back after tough home loss to Shockers

Sophomore Justin Bloxom fields a ball Tuesday in the Wildcats 4-3 loss to Wichita State on April 8. K-State will play Baylor in a three-game home series starting tonight at 6:30 p.m. in Tointon Family Stadium.

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team is looking to shake off its disappointment from a loss to Wichita State on Tuesday when it takes the field at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium against the Baylor Bears.

Walking batters with the bases loaded left K-State (15-16, 2-7 Big 12 Conference) in comeback mode against the Shockers, but a double play with bases loaded slammed the door shut on the Wildcats' upset bid.

Coach Brad Hill said his team has a positive attitude heading into the weekend and players shouldn't feel ashamed about losing to Wichita State, a team ranked No. 5 in the USA Today/ESPN coaches' poll.

"We didn't play a bad game," Hill said. "The ball decided to bounce off the pads, and we weren't able to score. That's just baseball."

Baylor (20-12, 6-6) comes to Manhattan having won four of its last five games, including a three-game sweep of Kansas in Waco, Texas. The Bears were a young team last year, but with a year under their belt, they present considerable problems for K-State.

The forecast calls for potential inclement weather in tonight's ballgame, but Hill said he has more important issues to worry about, like trying to prevent his team from performing the same way it did against Baylor last year.

"They've got good, young arms and they're coming off a sweep, so they have momentum," Hill said. "They were a young team a year ago, and they hit us very well down there last year, just like Texas A&M did to us last week."

After getting swept by the Aggies on the road, the Wildcats seem to play better when they are in the comfortable confines of their own field, which is something Hill believes is necessary for a successful team.

"I'm the type of guy that wants to win 80 percent of our games at home and 50 percent on the road," Hill said. "If we do that, we'll be in good shape."

Teams can get in trouble if they worry too much about the other team, which Hill said he doesn't want to do. He also said if the Wildcats want to be successful against the Bears, they simply need to focus on their own games.

"We can't worry about them," Hill said. "We have to do what we are trying to do."

The three-game series continues with games on Saturday at 2 p.m. and Sunday at 1 p.m.

Students should be supportive of Beasley

JOEL ASCHBRENNER

It's no secret Michael Beasley has a pretty big decision to make. April 27 is the last day for underclassmen to declare for the NBA draft.

Just for the record: Mike, please stay in school. Everyone loves you here. Wherever you get drafted won't have eight Dara's Fast Lanes and thousands of college coeds. Just tell the NBA to wait one more year and stay in Manhattan, where you're a hero. Please.

That said, if Beasley surprises no one and decides to turn pro, he will have a great future ahead of him. No one can blame him for leaving for the NBA.

Beasley would almost certainly be chosen No. 1 overall June 27. Greg Oden, the first pick in 2007, made a base salary of $3.885 million over his rookie season. Kevin Durant signed a $60 million endorsement deal with Nike that included a $10 million signing bonus after being drafted second overall behind Oden. Both rookies signed lucrative contracts with numerous other sponsors; Oden's deal to be the spokesman for Topps pays $3 million.

It's easy, as a K-State student, to say Beasley should resist the money and stay in school one more year. But would you? If you could quit school today and get paid millions of dollars to do what you love, would you show up to class on Monday?

Think of what Beasley can do with that kind of money. He could buy a house and put a Dara's inside it. He could buy the world's finest SpongeBob SquarePants linens. He could get as many iPods as he wanted.

If Beasley does decide to enter this June's NBA draft, he will probably have a very successful career. And if he does leave, K-State fans will still have something to cheer about. When was the last time the face of an NBA franchise was a former Wildcat? I wasn't alive for most of Rolando Blackman's career and I hardly remember Mitch Richmond's prime, so watching a former Wildcat thrive in the professional game wouldn't be disappointing at all.

I know it will be hard without him next year, but just think of Beasley dunking over Lebron James, hitting a turn-around fade-away jumper in Kevin Garnett's face, or blocking the shot of a driving Kobe Bryant. Losing Beasley to the NBA doesn't seem so terrible anymore, does it?

Are you still not convinced that any good can come out of Beasleys escape to the NBA? Just wait for the commercialization of Beasley. I can't wait to lace up a pair of brand new Beasleys or throw on a No. 30 BEASLEY jersey of my new favorite NBA team.

I can't wait to see Beasley being advertised, just like the other rookie stars. Imagine Beasley in a commercial for ESPN the Magazine, like Oden. Imagine Beasley, instead of Durant, in the commercial for Nike Sparq Training saying, "My quick and my fast had a baby and called it speedy." I can't say for sure what Beasley will be selling, but I'll be buying.

Of course I want Beasley to stay at K-State and electrify Bramlage for another year, but I'm not going to be sad watching him become a superstar and lighting up the NBA.

Riding program helps children, people of all ages overcome disabilities

By Whitney Noe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"I saw a child, no legs below, sit on a horse, and make it go. Through woods of green and places he had never been, to sit and stare, except from a chair."

These words are part of a poem written by John Anthony Davies. They are words that inspire the place known as Hope Ranch.

Hope Ranch is a center for the Therapeutic Horseback Riding Program. It was established about four years ago by Hope Ranch director Ken Scroggs and his 13-year-old daughter, Kassidy. The program provides the opportunity for children, students and adults with disabilities to participate in a healing and enjoyable activity.

Scroggs said after he worked as the executive director of Big Brothers Big Sisters, he and his daughter decided to set up a program based on the life-changing experiences he saw while working with disabled children and horses. This led to the discovery of therapeutic horseback riding.

"The therapeutic side of this is that a horse's walk is an exaggerated human walk," Scroggs said, "and what you do in therapy to make something work is you exaggerate it and when they get done it's better."

Scroggs said the ranch now has about 50 riders, ranging from age 4 to older than 40 years old.

"What this program does is it allows people with all different ages, all different disabilities, all different situations to be set up into classes where they can learn different skills," Scroggs said.

The seven-level program runs for 10 weeks and costs $30 per class or $300 for the entire 10-week session; however, Scroggs said they will never turn anyone away who cannot afford it.

"We do not turn down any riders based on financial reasons," Scroggs said. "Every person that applies with us will ride in our program."

The ranch operates at $40,000 per year, but Scroggs said the program is worth the effort and money put into it when he experiences the smiling faces of the children who are enjoying themselves. Even some of the instructors are overwhelmed by the effect the kids have and the accomplishments they make every day.

"[Hope Ranch is] one of those places where I went thinking I was going to bless the kids' lives, when in actuality, they bless mine so much more," said Chelsea Nunn, a Hope Ranch instructor.

Nunn, freshman in communication sciences and disorders, has worked as an instructor for Hope Ranch since October 2007. She said she enjoys her job and fell in love with the horses and the children when she first met them.

"A lot of these kids don't get the opportunity to be normal kids, but when they get on a horse, they are all the same," Nunn said. "To see their faces light up is so amazing; there are no words to describe it."

Nunn works with an autistic 12-year-old boy who she said was reserved and withdrawn when he first started riding. She said as classes progressed, he started getting more vocal and began to arrive with a smile on his face and high-fives to give everyone.

"The transformation of his personality and being more outgoing is amazing," Nunn said. "You get those kids around horses and they get so caught up in having fun that they forget they can't do certain things."

Scroggs said the goal of the program is being able to witness the changes and breakthroughs in many of the kids that come to ride on a regular basis. He said the program not only takes the kids' minds off their everyday problems and allows them to be normal kids, but its therapeutic values are undeniable.

"It's crazy when you see some of the things that happen and the minor breakthroughs and you think 'wow that's not supposed to happen out here,'" Scroggs said. "That's when you know it's working, and we've seen a lot of it."

Storms pound region with heavy rain, snow

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS – A line of severe thunderstorms, possible tornadoes and even snow pounded the nation's heartland on Thursday, flooding nearly 200 roads in Missouri, closing schools in Arkansas and ripping the roofs of dozens of houses in Texas.

The band of storms stretched from Colorado and Nebraska, which was expected to get up to 10 inches of snow, to Texas, where high winds and driving rain left a quarter of a million people without power at one point.

In Missouri, 3-4 inches of rain fell in just a few hours, unleashing flash floods that swamped parts of 180 roads across the state.

Rescuers using ropes and life jackets pulled nine people from the offices of the Monett Times newspaper after the Kelly Creek burst its banks and surrounded the building. Police said the creek also threatened other businesses in downtown Monett and forced the evacuation of a nearby trailer park with about 10 to 12 homes.

Times publisher Lisa Craft said the afternoon newspaper's presses were high enough not to be threatened. But she said it was unclear when staff could get back in the building.

National Weather Service hydrologist Mark Fuchs said the Meramec, the eastern Missouri river that flooded in March and forced the evacuation of hundreds of residents, could reach what the service considers "major" flood stage in Arnold, about 20 miles south of St. Louis.

In Texas, at least 100 homes and buildings were damaged in West Texas and the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Straight-line winds carved out a destructive path across the city of Hurst, just east of Fort Worth. Downed trees littered residential neighborhoods, blocking streets, snapping utility poles and snagging power lines. Some large tree trucks had snapped just a foot or two above ground level.

Evelyn Wooten, 69, said she spent early Thursday morning sitting alone in a front-hall closet wearing a motorcycle helmet and waiting out the storm in the sturdiest room in her house.

"I wasn't going to be hit in the head by a two-by-four," Wooten said, supervising the cleanup of her Hurst home, which was punctured by a falling tree. "I just made me a cozy little den in there."

At one point, Oncor had about 250,000 customers without power in North Texas. Some could remain without power until Saturday.

In Arkansas, dozens of roads flooded across the state and schools in Norfork, Marshall and Viola closed due to high water.

In Washington County, in the state's northwest, officials said damage to roadways was unprecedented.

To the south in Sebastian County, cleanup continued from a hailstorm that ripped up roofs and broke windshields as the first wave of storms moved through Wednesday night.

Winds of 70 mph were recorded in thunderstorms in the state's northwest Thursday.

Flights at Little Rock National Airport were suspended for just under an hour due to a tornado warning. Airport spokesman T.J. Williams said between 300 and 400 people were moved to safe places away from windows.

The heavy rain caused the Mississippi River to swell and the Army Corps of Engineers plans to open a spillway north of New Orleans for the first time in 11 years to ease the pressure on levees and spare the area from flooding.

Friday's planned opening of the Bonnet Carre Spillway, about 30 miles above New Orleans, will mark only the ninth time it has been opened since its completion in 1931.

Meanwhile, snow was falling across Nebraska, South Dakota and Colorado. Up to 10 inches were forecast in Nebraska, where the snowstorm caused power outages, school closures and treacherous road conditions.

Adopt-A-Highway easy opportunity to help

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are many ways to help the environment and one option that is not often explored is the Adopt-A-Highway program.

Don Campbell, utility coordinator for Pottawatomie, Marshall, Riley and parts of Wabaunsee counties said the responsibilities for the program are not time-consuming.

"According to the contract you sign, you pick up three times a year," Campbell said.

Campbell also said participants need to take safety steps before each clean-up.

"No one under 11 is allowed to pick up and there must be one supervisor for every five children," he said.

These safety precautions are few and easy to understand, said Phil Hirsch, pastor of Hope Lutheran Church, which helps in the program.

"You have to get these little orange vests, and you have to have anyone who helps you sign the contract to make sure they're all legal," Hirsch said. "Then you go pick up the garbage and put it in the little blue bags and leave them on the side of the road." Even though the job is not very glamorous, there are many different types of groups that volunteer for the program.

"Around Manhattan [there are] a lot of fraternities and sororities in Manhattan, and two motorcycle clubs," Campbell said.

For as many miles of highway that need to be cleaned, there are just as many reasons groups decide to clean them up.

Hirsch said his church joined the program before it even had a building and used the publicity as a way to get Hope's name out in the public.

"At the time we were a start up church and we didn't even have a building," Hirsch said. "In some ways it was a nice way to get our name out there and tell people a group called Hope Lutheran Church was here [in town]."

Hirsch said when his church first signed up, it was much easier to "marshall the troops," but as time has passed, getting his congregation together has become more difficult.

"Frankly, it just gets harder to get [the cleaning] done," Hirsch said.

Campbell said the groups are not compensated in any way, other than the volunteer credit, and the Kansas Department of Transportation usually benefits more than the groups.

"We figure we're getting more out of it by picking up trash along the highway that we don't have to pay our employees to do," Campbell said.

ABOUT 'ADOPT'

Why should highways be adopted?
Litter pollutes the land and waterways in Kansas and can be harmful to people and animals. Adopting a highway helps the environment, saves tax dollars, and gives nonprofit groups a chance to get involved in the community. It is up to us to be responsible and keep our state looking great.

Who can adopt a highway?
Any nonprofit group that does not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, color or sex. Group members must be at least 11 years old and have adequate adult supervision.

What is required of participating groups?
Groups agree to remove litter at least three times a year for a two-year period at their convenience. There's no cost to a group that joins the program. KDOT places the signs marking each group's section of highway and provides the safety vests and trash bags.

Where are highways available to adopt?
There are urban and rural sections of highway available to adopt throughout the state. Please contact the KDOT office which is closest to you.

How can our group adopt a highway?
Please fill out the attached application form and send it to the nearest KDOT office. Groups may be put on a waiting list if they are interested in a particular area that is already adopted.

How long are the sections of highway?
Most sections are two miles in length. Some groups request three-mile sections in rural areas and some groups may adopt a one-mile stretch in urban areas. We work with each group to try and fit their needs. We encourage groups to plan an extra-curricular activity on their clean-up day. Many groups plan a picnic after they clean along the highway to combine work and fun.

The next time someone ridicules the holes in your jeans or your backwards baseball hat, blame it on the '90s.

The decade most college students remember as their awkward, pre-adolescent years was also an influence on today's pop-culture trends, and like previous 20th-century decades, many of the subculture styles were musically inspired.

MUSICAL INFLUENCES

From the grunge-rock appeal of Nirvana to the more-mainstreamed country sounds of Garth Brooks, the music of the '90s grew away from the pop sounds emphasized in the '80s.

Craig Parker, associate professor of music history and music, said bands like Nirvana and Pearl Jam mixed heavy-metal, distorted guitar sounds with lyrics that expressed their disaffection with society. He also said English alternative-rock band Radiohead heavily influenced the song-writers' trend of challenging listeners to read more into lyrics and decipher the band's message.

"You can still see that today, with bands whose lyrics aren't what they seem," Parker said. "Radiohead is definitely still prevalent today, along with Dave Matthews Band. I would say Dave Matthews Band is one of the most consistently popular bands today that got its start in the '90s."

Parker said the unusual instrumental sounds and cross-over appeal of the Dave Matthews Band are just two reasons for the group's success. They are known for appealing to listeners of all ages and culture groups.

Other niché music styles of the decade include pop and alternative rock from artists like Jewel and Alannis Morrisette; geek rock, made famous by the band Weezer; and pop, rap and hip-hop, embodied by artists like Britney Spears, Tupac Shakur and then-called Sean "Puff Daddy" Combs, according to www.inthe90s.com.

Though the last decade was full of subculture music genres, Parker described the band New Kids on the Block as one of the most influential bands of the '90s. With their collar-buttoned shirts and leather-patched jackets, they stole the hearts of millions of American teenage girls, and paved the way for more recent boy-bands like N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys.

ANTI-FASHION ... FASHION?

Thanks to the musical influences of hard-rock bands like Nirvana and lighter bands like New Kids on the Block, the '90s produced fashion styles that bordered on a total lack of fashion, said Deb Brosdahl, associate professor in the apparel and textiles program.

"The grunge movement started in the '80s, but gained popularity in the '90s," Brosdahl said. "I'd say it was the signature look, and it was accepted pretty readily into mainstream fashion. Really, it was referred to as anti-fashion."

She also said the grunge look typically consisted of plaid, flannel shirts and ripped, stone- or acid-washed jeans, which are still popular today.

Though musicians heavily influenced '90s styles, so did other public figures like Great Britain's Princess Diana and U.S.'s then-First Lady Hillary Clinton.

"Princess Di really made a statement with her evening wear; it was elegant and form-fitting," Brosdahl said. "And Hillary really popularized the pantsuit for women. Prior to that, women mostly wore 'powersuits' – business outfits, but with skirts."

Brosdahl also said the '90s was a time of tattoos and piercings, specifically in navels and men's ears. She also said the rise of hip-hop and gangsta rap popularized large tattoos on more noticeable parts of the body. She said hip-hop also brought sagging pants, large "bling-bling" jewelry and baseball jerseys and backward hats.

As for hair, popular TV sitcom "Friends" star Jennifer Aniston set the standard for women's hairstyles with her ever-changing, feathered layers and straight, blond streaks.

Other everyday styles from the '90s include white denim, stirrup pants and polo shirts. Traces of these can be seen in today's popular fashions. Brosdahl said natural colors like grey, oatmeal and olive green were also popular in the '90s.

JUST A NOTE

Popular musicians lack creativity, emotion

ADRIANNE DEWEESE

Grammy Award-winning Northern Irish singer, songwriter and instrumentalist Van Morrison once said, "Music is spiritual. The music business is not."

Popular music has always been a commercial industry and business, said Craig Parker, K-State associate professor of music history and music. During the 1840s, people purchased popular songs on sheet music and played them on the piano for their family members, Parker said.

While mass-market music historically served as a commercial industry, popular musicians today have lost a creative drive and emotional connection with listeners. Music has become more of a competition for who can sign the largest record deal or who can get the most votes on FOX's "American Idol."

According to an April 3 article in the New York Times, rapper Jay-Z plans to leave his longtime record label, Def Jam, for a $150 million contract with Live Nation. The contract, which would include financing for Jay-Z's own entertainment venture, recordings and tours for the next decade, is one of the biggest music contracts ever awarded, according to the article.

Contracts like Jay-Z's and similar ones Live Nation lined up with Madonna and U2 are necessities in an industry in which CD sales are dropping, according to the New York Times. But music used to stand for much more than dollars and cents signs. Music is a medium rooted in its cultural meanings, but music commonly heard on today's popular radio stations show what we've come to value. Songs like Nickelback's "Rockstar" convey messages about owning jets, standing first in line at clubs and, yes, getting to "dress my ass with the latest fashion."

Nineteenth-century Danish author Hans Christian Anderson once said, "Where words fail, music speaks." Music is a personal medium for performers and listeners alike. Today's popular music has crossed a line between a money-making industry and a selfish, purely commercial art form.

American folk musician Bob Dylan received a Pulitzer Prize earlier this week for his "profound impact on popular music and American culture." Musicians like Dylan are rarities in a society where songs about dance clubs, sexual promiscuity and violence rise up the charts.

While penning their next song or performing for fans – whether it's 100 or 100,000 people – musicians should remember their lyrics and melodies often speak louder than conventional conversations. Music never goes out of style – do musicians want their messages and portrayals to sing on after they've left?

'Gypsy' to perform tonight in McCain

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The story of the "ultimate stage mother" will be told tonight in McCain Auditorium.

"Gypsy: A Musical Fable" will be performed at 7:30 tonight as part of the McCain Performance Series, said Thom Jackson, McCain assistant director for marketing and development.

The musical is loosely based on the memoirs of Gypsy Rose Lee, the famous striptease artist, according to McCain's Web site. Jackson said the show is a combination of drama and comedy. The musical focuses on the life of Lee and her efforts as a stage mother.

"She was a stage mom," Jackson said. "She was always striving to have her children be on the stage. [She was] always pushy, always trying to have her kids at the front of the line and be on stage all the time."

The remaining tickets for the program will be sold for half price, Jackson said.

[The touring company] decided they wanted to fill the house up and not have any empty seats," Jackson said. "Any remaining seats in the house are on sale for 50 percent off the original price."

Undergraduate researcher shares interests

Jane Grdinovac, senior in psychology, studies the effects of emotional exhaustion. Grdinovac is one of the few undergraduate researchers at K-State.

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As her light brown ponytail bounces with nods of enthusiasm, Jane Grdinovac talks about her passions: traveling, toast and researching.

Grdinovac, senior in psychology, is one of K-State's few undergraduate researchers and recently gave a presentation on her work at the 13th annual K-State Research Forum, an honor extended to only 25 undergraduates.

"She was quite professional," said Robert Downey, Grdinovac's research adviser and professor of psychology, about her presentation.

"I thought she did an excellent job presenting her findings clearly and explaining her work to the judges and audience."

FAMILY TIES

Grdinovac tells the story of her family's unusual start: Her parents met, fell in love and got married – all in one week.

Her parents are Croatian and were both born and raised there, living periodically in the U.S. When Grdinovac turned two, the family moved permanently from Croatia to Kansas City, Kan., where her parents opened a barbecue restaurant.

"We all worked in [the restaurant] while we were growing up," she said smiling, recalling the simple joys of her childhood. "I loved it because I got to be around my family and it was just a great atmosphere."

Grdinovac attributes her success in life to her tight-knit family background.

She had an aunt and uncle with several children whom she lived next door to in Kansas City.

"My parents would decide to move across town or to a new neighborhood, and [her aunt and uncle] would just move next door to us each time," she said. "It was crazy."

Still chuckling at her family, Grdinovac shares a few of her own quirks. For example, she has a twin brother and an obsession with eating toast.

"It's just so good," she said. "I can't help it – I eat like four pieces a day, at least."

Though she is close to her family, Grdinovac has always been independent, so when it came time to look at colleges, she said she knew K-State was the right school for her. Though neither of her parents had attended college, they strongly encouraged all three of their children to pursue degrees.

"They just really wanted us to be successful, and so they pushed us to apply and go where we wanted," she said.

GETTING HER START

Grdinovac decided to enroll as a psychology major, though she was still uncertain what she wanted to do for a career.

During her freshman year, she took a clinical psychology course that she said she didn't enjoy. However, she also took an industrial psychology course, taught by Downey, and she said class is what sparked her interest in industrial psychology.

"I liked it because you get to increase employee satisfaction by doing more than just sitting and talking," Grdinovac said. "With the clinical side, you just hear all of the emotions, and you don't always feel like you're helping anybody."

Grdinovac took another of Downey's classes, and he mentioned undergraduate research to the students. It caught her attention, so she contacted him and the two met to discuss researching job burnout, job flow and work exhaustion – all effects of a response pattern of emotional exhaustion.

One of her first independent projects focused on the college stress levels of a local sorority her senior year, including factors like depersonalization and personal acceptance.

"We were trying to find the differences between greeks and non-greeks," Grdinovac said. "But we didn't really find too much difference in their stress levels, only a minor bit."

As a member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, Grdinovac said life can be hectic, trying to balance greek activities, classes and her research work.

Downey said Grdinovac is a meticulous researcher and has innovative ideas when planning her next step.

"She is always thinking ahead," he said. "She is just a responsible, intelligent young student. I see great things from her."

THE NEXT STEP

Though she is anxious to graduate and put all she has learned to use, Grdinovac said she would like to attend graduate school before she begins a professional career.

"You just can't do much with an [undergraduate degree] in the psychology world," she said. "I'd like to go to grad school just so I could get a job anywhere I wanted."

Grdinovac said she also has dreams of traveling, working in foreign countries and different cites around the U.S. "I don't want to be tied down," she said.

Phi Beta Sigma has historic past

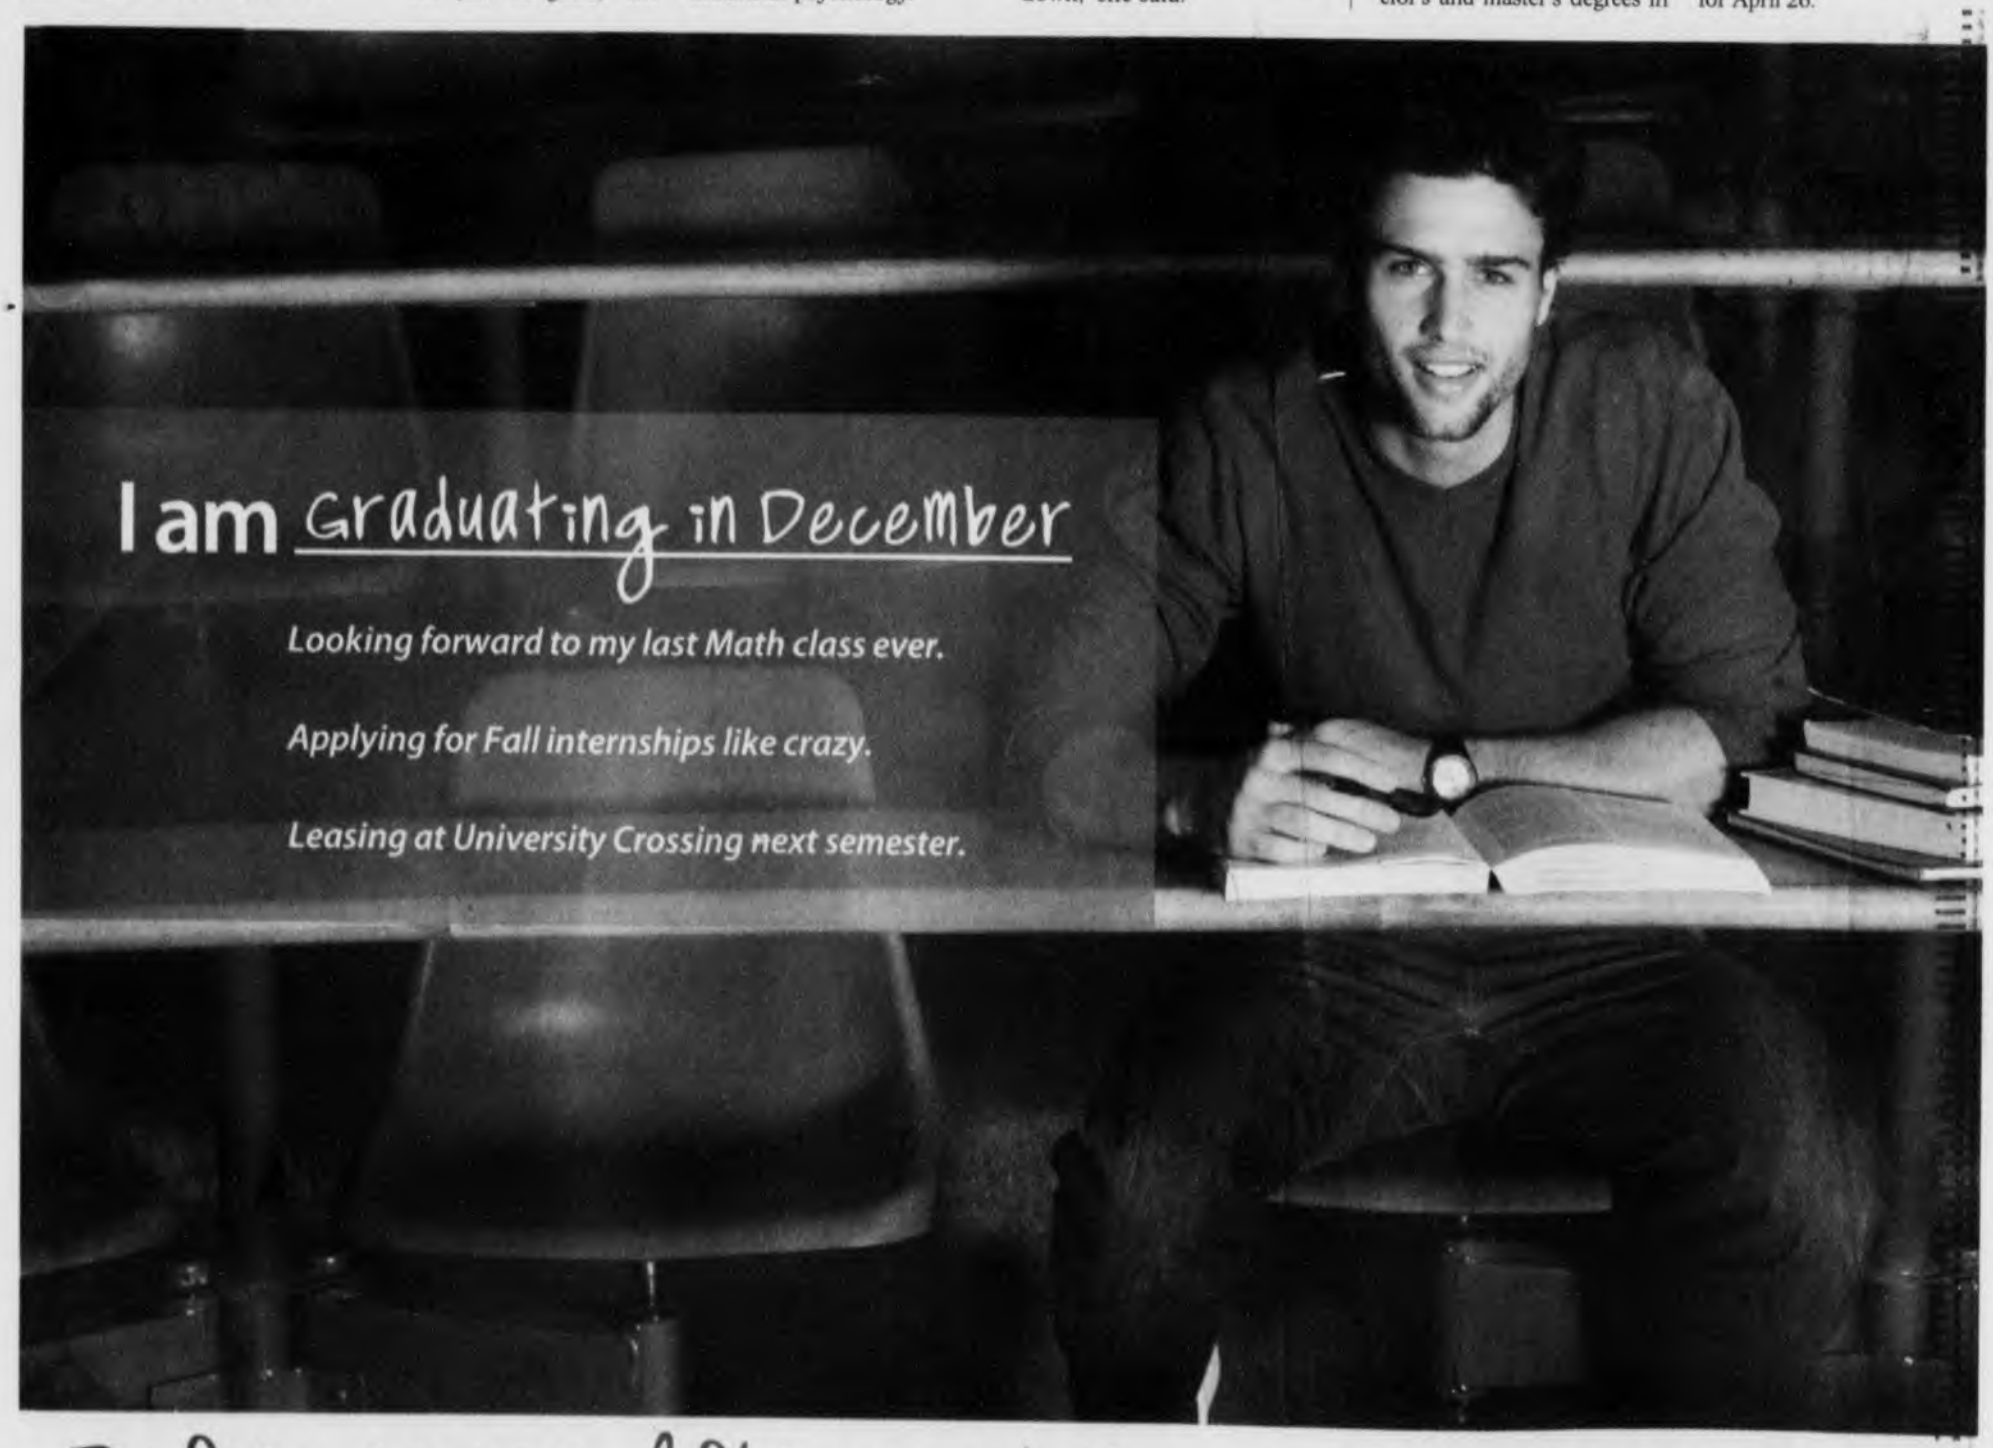
The Phi Beta Sigma fraternity house served as the chapter house 1921 to 1930. The house still stands at 1020 Colorado St.

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When was the first social fraternity that initiated black members established at K-State?

The Delta chapter of Phi Beta Sigma fraternity was founded at Kansas State Agricultural College on April 9, 1917. The national organization was formed at Howard University in Washington, D.C., in 1914. One of the original founding fathers, Charles Ignatius Brown, personally visited Manhattan to colonize K-State's Delta chapter.



The founding was a historic event, as it was the first chapter of the historically black fraternity founded west of the Mississippi River on an integrated campus.

The members of Phi Beta Sigma resided at 1020 Colorado St. from 1921 to 1930. Many of the men who pledged the fraternity while living at the house led distinguished careers in their field. Louis Edwin Fry was the first black student at K-State elected to The Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi. He received bachelor's and master's degrees in architectural engineering from K-State and designed numerous structures in his career, including Moton Hall, the engineering building at the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama.

Sheridan Shetler graduated in 1926 with a degree in animal husbandry and later returned to complete his master's degree in 1934. Shetler is known for working with renowned scientist George Washington Carver in the 1920s and 1930s on various agricultural projects.

Frank Marshall Davis was a journalism student who received numerous national awards for his writing and was known on campus for his columns in the Collegian under the title "A Diplomat in Black." Davis wrote critically acclaimed poetry and published three books in his lifetime.

The original home of the fraternity changed tenants numerous times after 1930. The ground floor of the original home still stands today. Pat Patton, assistant at University Archives in Hale Library, said the local fraternity recently reacquired the home. A rededication ceremony is planned for April 26.

changing who he is."

Chasson's husband was deployed from September 2003 to September 2004 and was back in Iraq from September 2006 to December 2007. She said that while he was deployed, she spoke to him about every other day through quick phone calls and e-mails.

Chasson said she coped with her husband's physical distance through family, friends and keeping herself busy. The Chassons have two sons, ages 7 and 19 months. She is also pregnant with their first daughter, who is due in September.

"I've had to learn to have a lot of patience," Chasson said. "It's gotten a lot easier, though. I can usually handle my own emotions, but it's the hardest when my kids come in and say 'I miss and want my daddy' – it's just difficult for them to understand."

Shaniell Cunha, senior in family life and community services, holds a set of dog tags that her husband Robert gace her before he had to leave with the Army.

LIVING 2 LIVES

Shaniell Cunha, senior in family life and community services and Army wife, said though she agrees having a husband in the Army can strengthen the marital bond and connection between a couple, it's been difficult spending her first year of marriage physically apart from her husband.

She has been married to her husband, Robert, for a little more than a year. He left in February 2006 for Iraq and will return on April 11. She said he will then be home for another three years, because they are moving to Fort Sill, Okla., because of Army orders.

"Although I think our marriage can be stronger than traditional marriages because we don't ever take each other for granted, being an Army wife has some negatives," she said. "I don't really know what it's like to be married because he's been gone."

Cunha said being a full-time student and wife can make her feel like she's leading a double life, and there are times she wishes she hadn't gotten married so young. She said attempting to be an independent wife without her husband has been difficult and has forced her to mature quickly.

"I'm still young, and most people are just students or just wives and mothers," she said. "People can frown down on me for wanting to go out and have fun, but I'm going to live my 20-year-old life as long as possible."

Cunha dated her husband for just five months before he proposed, but said she knew beforehand military relationships move quickly and was expectant and ready for marriage.

Cunha said she talks to her husband every day by phone or e-mail and is thankful to have her friends and family to help her cope with Robert's absence. She said she has networked with other Army wives through online support groups and has become close with Robert's friends' wives as well.

"I try not to take my emotions out on him, because he's just doing his job," she said. "I just try and surround myself with the right group of people, and I balance my time between my college friends and my Army-wife friends. Everyone needs those few select friends they can have emotional breakdowns with."

KEEPING BUSY

Laura Gant, senior in family studies, said though she feels like she's married to the Army because of her husband's occupation, she thinks right now is the best time for him to be involved with it.

Gant married her husband, Mark, this February just a week before he was deployed. She said he moves to different sites around the U.S. and will leave for Afghanistan sometime between April 6 and June 3. He is scheduled to return home in June 2009.

"I have to share time with my husband with another entity," she said. "No matter what you say, they have the last say. It's something I have no control over. However, right now, we're both young and resilient–it's the best time of our lives to be associated with the Army."

Gant said the long periods she waits without communication with her husband constitute the hardest parts of being an Army wife.

"Our communication level changes at the different sites he's at," she said. "During his last deploy, I talked to him about every second or third day for a couple minutes, and for about five minutes on the weekends. It's a different type of communication than what most are used to–big decisions we have are a moment's response."

Gant said she copes with this low communication level by keeping herself busy. She is enrolled in 22 credit hours this semester and works about 35 to 40 hours a week.

"I'm trying to do two great things at once," she said. "I'm an Army wife and student, and it's frustrating because a lot of people don't understand how hard that is."

Even with the difficulties and frustrations Gant faces each day, she said everything is worth it when she sees her husband in his uniform, and knows she is supporting his dream.

"My favorite part of being an Army wife is seeing my man in uniform," she said. "Whenever he gets into his uniform, I know he's doing what he wants to do. He's proud of himself, and I am, too. I wouldn't give that feeling of pride and support for anything in the world."

TENNIS | Team to face 3 tough Big 12 teams

Corovic and junior Marija Milic, and Zauft and freshman Maggie Mello also have posted unbeaten conference records. Bietau has a clear idea of what he believes will help the Wildcats succeed.

"From my standpoint, if we maintain the edge we saw there [Sunday] and just play a little less scared or a little less confused, we'll be OK," he said. "Sunday's match was different in the sense in that there didn't seem to be all the mental issues. There was more of a focus on playing and more of their energy was directed on what they needed to do to win the match. In terms of our success or failure, this weekend there's no question that we're not going to win if that doesn't continue. So that's got to happen and hopefully we can find other ways and places to translate the performances into wins."

Senior Olga Klimova said the Wildcats will use a number of different strategies to find success.

"Against those teams, there's not as much pressure on us," she said. "So we can try different things; we can go on the court and say we have nothing to lose. So that will be our big advantage."

After the road trip, K-State will return for its final home match of the season on April 18 against Iowa State. The match will begin at 3 p.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility. Admission to all K-State tennis matches is free.

the spring game, that serves as a recruiting effort to show the best of K-State, VonFeldt said. Each college is expected to recruit volunteers for its booths but additional volunteers are needed to help the planning committee. VonFeldt said some of her tasks include organizing lost volunteers, the shuttle system and a new program called passports.

Prospective students are encouraged to visit the six colleges and put a stamp in their fake passports. Each student who completes this challenge will be entered into a drawing for prizes. Current students who want to volunteer can visit their college office to sign up, said Tracy Edwards, sophomore in finance and public relations chair.

"Volunteering really gives you a behind-the-scenes look at your college," Edwards said. "You can also share your experiences with the new students."

Erica Mason, senior in mass communications and public relations assistant, said volunteers will not be required to work all day – just in shifts.

"We want more younger students to volunteer so they can step up and take more leadership positions," Mason said.

The Truth About Self-defense and Rape
There is a difference between self-defense and fighting. Self-defense is ideally about avoiding and preventing attacks, not looking for a fight.
Many attacks involve the use of alcohol. Avoiding drunks is a good way to avoid being attacked. Be careful when you party.
Most attacks are done by friends and family members, not strangers.
Most attacks against women happen between the ages of 18 and 25. Anyone can be attacked, but the odds are stacked again college age women.
For more information, read the book, Self-defense Theory, Volume One, by Stan Wilson, available at Hastings in Manhattan.

her own child. Norwood, mother of Specialist Robert Juric, was separated from her son for more than 14 months and drove 15 hours with her husband from northern Alabama to welcome her son.

"The hardest part is waiting," she said. "We waited all week for their arrival, and it couldn't have been any better."

Norwood said her son left when he was 19 years old and returned at 21.

Her son, the oldest of three, was recently married during his leave, so several people were anticipating his arrival.

Norwood spent the entire night calling her family members and updating them on their arrival.

She said it was difficult being without her son for the extended period of time, but she said a she and her husband consider themselves lucky to have their son return home.

"We've been very blessed with the highs and lows," she said. "I'm very proud of his unit, I'm very proud of him, and I'm just really glad to see them all come home."

Student dies in Jardine fall

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student died early Saturday morning from injuries received when he fell from a second-story balcony at the Jardine Apartment Complex, said Beth Bohn, K-State media relations editor.

WALKER

Joshua David Walker, freshman in pre-professional business administration, died around 7 a.m. Saturday at Via Christi Regional Medical Center in Wichita. The 19 year old was flown to the Wichita hospital after first being taken to Mercy Regional Health Center in Manhattan.

According to Bohn, K-State police responded to a call at about 1 a.m. Saturday that a student had fallen from a Jardine apartment's balcony. She also said Walker was a guest at the apartment and he lived off campus.

Jordan Geyer, Manhattan resident and Walker's friend, said he last saw Walker just before 11 p.m. Friday. He said he and Walker had been with a small group of their friends that evening, but then Geyer left a little before 11 to go to his job.

"After I left, Josh and four of our other friends were just messing around and went to Jardine, to a party," Geyer said.

He said he received a phone call from his twin brother later, who said Walker had fallen from a balcony and was being flown to the Wichita hospital. Geyer said he didn't realize at first how serious Walker's condition was.

"I was just thinking he would be fine and that it wasn't really too serious," he said. "I just wasn't aware of the head trauma and how bad it was."

Geyer, who met Walker through mutual friends in Manhattan last fall, said his friend will be greatly missed.

"Josh was just a fun-spirited kid, always wanted to push things and always stood up for people when they needed it," he said. "I always saw him smiling, too."

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said he spoke with Walker's father and expressed the university's condolences to his family.

"We are all saddened by this tragedy, and our thoughts are with Josh and his family," Bosco said.

Bosco also said the university will wait to go ahead with any kind of memorial until they receive consent from Walker's family.

"We have scheduled follow-up contact with them and will move in a direction they feel is appropriate," he said.

As for students, Bosco said the Jardine staff met with residents of Jardine's Building 7 – the building in which the accident occurred – Saturday night. He said members of K-State's counseling staff, student life and campus ministries were also at the meeting.

"We had a wide range of emotions at the meeting," Bosco said. "From tears to students asking 'Why did this happen?'"

Walker's death is under investigation by the K-State police, and further details have not been released, Bosco said.

"This is now in the hands of the [campus] police," Bosco said. "They are in the throngs of the investigation. And I appreciate so very much the work of the Jardine staff, Housing personnel, the office of student life and student police in helping us respond to this most recent tragedy."

Walker's funeral will be 10 a.m. on Wednesday in his hometown, Johnson, Kan., said Geyer.

During Relay for Life, individuals walk around the track inside Ahearn Field House from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. Originally the event was to be held in Memorial Stadium, but because of the weather, it was moved indoors.

Survivors, committee help Relay for Life run smoothly

Luminarias line the track in Ahearn Field House in honor of cancer survivors and memory of cancer victims.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As Natalie Deutsch watched the names appear on the projector screen in the cool darkness, one caught her by surprise and took her back to a more somber time in her life.

Deutsch, senior in apparel marketing, saw her friend Heather Henning's name in the middle of a list of cancer victims in a memorial powerpoint at Friday and Saturday's K-State Relay for Life in Ahearn Field House.

Deutsch, a cancer survivor, said she met Henning in the hospital several years ago when they were both undergoing chemotherapy and radiation treatments. Though the two girls only knew each other for a short time, Deutsch said their disease made them closer. Eventually, Deutsch won her battle with cancer; Henning did not.

"I leaned on her; we were just so close," Deutsch said. "Then, she was released [from the hospital] and when she came back to visit me, her hair was growing back and I was so envious because mine was still gone.

"The next thing I knew, she was back in the hospital and I was released. Then, I went to her funeral. We were the same age."

THE SURVIVOR

Deutsch was diagnosed with AMML leukemia in 2002, her junior year of high school.

"Cancer doesn't run in my family; it was a pretty big shock," she said.

She said she endured painful treatments for several years from age 16, and multiple times her body would not respond to chemotherapy. However, she has now been cancer-free for about two years and Friday's event was her seventh Relay for Life and her first at K-State. She said Relay is a much-needed encouragement for cancer survivors and she appreciated the smaller size of K-State's Relay.

"[K-State's Relay] is different than the other ones I've been to, but I like the smallness – it's much more personable," she said. "It's just so nice to know so many people here care.

"Cancer is just so emotional. Your friends and family can help you deal, but ultimately, you just have to figure out how to deal with it yourself. I just look at it as

Volunteers celebrate Community Appreciation Day

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several types of Manhattan neighbors turned out to help celebrate Community Appreciation Day Saturday around the town with different community-service and themed events

GOOD NEIGHBORS

The Good Neighbors Program, K-State's Student Governing Association and the City of Manhattan worked from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. raking leaves for people in specific areas around town.

Among the volunteers was Student Body President Lydia Peele, senior in math education. She said the group accomplished a significant amount of work and filled two truckloads of bagged leaves in her area alone. She also said the group only filled one bag of trash.

Community members were able to call ahead and reserve a volunteer to help them pick up trash, rake leaves or do other yard work.

WILD NEIGHBORS

Tigers paced, bears roared and children dug up dinosaur bones Saturday afternoon.

The Sunset Zoological Park allowed free admission to everybody Saturday afternoon in celebration of Community Appreciation Day.

Sunset Zoo chose Dino Day as a theme to get children excited, said program assistant Krista Wertz, graduate student in psychology.

Wertz gave children and their parents information on specific dinosaurs that would have been found in Kansas during prehistoric times, with strings stretched out to represent each one's length.

Activities provided by the zoo included lessons from paleontologists and story times.

Various games captured the children's attention, including a race to pick up a marshmallows in their mouths.

The race was operated by volunteer Rachel Gormen, Manhattan High School sophomore.

"I think it's just a relief for people [to get outside] now that the weather is getting warmer," she said.

Edward Smith, Manhattan resident and first-grade student, participates in the "Dino Dig" — part of Dino Days held at the Sunset Zoological Park on Saturday.

THIS WEEK

A look at events that took place during this week in history

TODAY 1865: LINCOLN SHOT

On this day in 1865, John Wilkes Booth, an actor and Confederate sympathizer, fatally shot President Abraham Lincoln at a play at Ford's Theater in Washington, D.C. The attack came only five days after Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered his massive army at Appomattox Court House, Va., effectively ending the American Civil War.

Lincoln, the 16th U.S. president, was buried on May 4, 1865, in Springfield, Ill.

TUESDAY 1947: JACKIE ROBINSON BREAKS BARRIER

On this day in 1947, Jackie Robinson, age 28, became the first black player in Major League Baseball when he stepped onto Ebbets Field in Brooklyn to compete for the Brooklyn Dodgers. Robinson broke the color barrier in a sport that had been segregated for more than 50 years. Exactly 50 years later, on April 15, 1997, Robinson's ground-breaking career was honored and his uniform number, 42, was retired from Major League Baseball by Commissioner Bud Selig in a ceremony attended by more than 50,000 fans at New York City's Shea Stadium. Robinson's was the first-ever number retired by all teams in the league.

WEDNESDAY 1943: CHEMIST CONSUMES LSD

In Basel, Switzerland, Albert Hoffman, a Swiss chemist working at the Sandoz pharmaceutical research laboratory, accidentally consumed LSD-25, a synthetic drug he had created in 1938 as part of his research into the medicinal value of lysergic acid compounds. After taking the drug, formally known as lysergic acid diethylamide, Dr. Hoffman was disturbed by unusual sensations and hallucinations. In his notes, he related the experience:

"Last Friday, April 16, 1943, I was forced to interrupt my work in the laboratory in the middle of the afternoon and proceed home, being affected by a remarkable restlessness, combined with a slight dizziness."

THURSDAY 1970: APOLLO 13 RETURNS TO EARTH

With the world anxiously watching, Apollo 13, a U.S. lunar spacecraft that suffered a severe malfunction on its journey to the moon, safely returned to Earth.

On April 11, the third manned lunar landing mission was launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla., carrying astronauts James A. Lovell, John L. Swigert, and Fred W. Haise. The mission was headed for a landing on the Fra Mauro highlands of the moon. However, two days into the mission, disaster struck 200,000 miles from Earth when oxygen tank No. 2 blew up in the spacecraft. Mission commander Lovell reported to mission control on Earth: "Houston, we've had a problem here."

FRIDAY 1906: THE GREAT SAN FRANCISCO EARTHQUAKE DESTROYS CITY

An earthquake estimated at close to 8.0 on the Richter scale hit San Francisco, Calif., killing hundreds of people as it toppled numerous buildings. The quake was caused by a slip of the San Andreas Fault over a segment about 275 miles long, and shock waves could be felt from southern Oregon down to Los Angeles.

San Francisco's brick buildings and wooden Victorian structures were especially devastated. Fires immediately broke out and firestorms soon developed citywide. At 7 a.m., U.S. Army troops from Fort Mason reported to the Hall of Justice, and San Francisco Mayor E.E. Schmitz called for the enforcement of a dusk-to-dawn curfew and authorized soldiers to shoot-to-kill anyone found looting.

Meanwhile, in the face of significant aftershocks, firefighters and U.S. troops fought desperately to control the ongoing fire, often dynamiting whole city blocks to create firewalls.

Class organizes 1st charity horse show

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Donkeys bucked and rolled around on the floor in resistance to being ridden for a game of donkey softball.

The K-State Horseman's Association and Equine Event Planning Team collaborated for the first-ever "Wildcat Classic" Charity Horse Show Saturday at Timber Creek.

"As a class, we decided to do a horse show and tack swap to incorporate the community along with the college," said Erica Mackiewicz, freshman in agricultural communications and journalism.

Equine Event Planning is an elective class, and students were assigned to organize an event. The class chose to have its event benefit an organization.

"For the class, we had to set up an event, so the event we put on was this horse show and tack swap to benefit Hope Ranch, which is a Therapeutic riding program," Mackiewicz said.

Hope Ranch is a therapeutic riding program that consists of a 10-week course for people of all ages with disabilities. Two of the day's events were assigned just for those with disabilities.

"These kids have never ridden a horse before, and they've gone through training and don't have a place to show off their skills," said Ashley Woolery, Hope Ranch volunteer. "It's nice to have a place that has a class just for disabled kids."

Originally, the event was supposed to take place at CiCo Park, but because of weather, it was relocated to Timber Creek, Mackiewicz said.

The main fundraising event took place in the form of a tack swap. Tack refers to horse equipment. Students sold used tack that people brought in, and 15 percent of the tax sale went to Hope Ranch, Mackiewicz said.

The day's events ranged from basic activities to more challenging, timed competitions.

A horse handler from a previous horse show hosted by the K-State Equine Planning Team warms up her horse before the show at CiCo Park.

During a "bra race," two people on two horses held a bra with tennis balls in the cups and ran around the arena trying to keep the tennis balls in the cups.

Timed competitions included the bat and flag race. During the bat race, participants raced to the bat on their horses, got off, spun around with the bat 10 times, got back on the horse, and whoever finished the fastest, won. The flag race, people ran to the end on their horse and put flags in buckets.

Not all competitions required much activity. A costume class in which participants and their horses dressing up kept participants engaged, and a K-State horse wearing a purple costume took first place.

"An event like this, anyone can participate – you don't have to be Western or English," Mackiewicz said.

Western and English refers to two different styles of riding. English uses a different saddle, and the styles of dress are different, Mackiewicz explained. "It's a different discipline style."

The "Wildcat Classic" was not limited to events only at Timber Creek. Jumping Events took place at Fox Creek.

"The jumping was held at Fox Creek by the equestrian team because most of the jumping entrees were the equestrian team," Mackiewicz said.

The final event was a game of donkey softball. Volunteers played a game of softball while riding donkeys.

"I had a lot of fun, and it's for a good cause," said Megan Okeson, freshman in animal sciences and industry.

Man thrown from car; woman's jewelry stolen

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 26-year-old man was ejected from his vehicle and found unconscious after striking a median on Tuttle Creek Boulevard Thursday.

Daniel Westgate of Fargo, N.D., was driving eastbound on Madison Avenue in his 1987 Chevrolet 1500, half-top pick-up when he tried to merge southbound onto Tuttle Creek Boulevard, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

Westgate struck the median on Tuttle Creek Boulevard and rolled his vehicle. He was ejected from the vehicle and found unconscious by the Riley County Police at about 11 p.m., according to the report.

Lifestar transported him to Topeka. He suffered head and chest injuries.

Police said they believe alcohol was involved in the accident. The incident is still under investigation, according to the police report.

Police reports also mentioned miscellaneous jewelry worth $7,414 stolen from a woman's house late last week, according to a RCPD report.

The burglary occurred overnight between Wednesday and Thursday at 1114 Yuma St., according to the police report.

Several family heirlooms were included in the stolen items, police said.

No injuries were reported, and police said they have arrested no suspects.

One power flite buffer was reported stolen from Atwood Rental, 1927 Fort Riley Blvd., according to police.

The buffer was worth $625. It was rented on March 12 and was not returned as of Thursday.

OPINION

HIT OR MISS

The editorial board selects Hit or Miss topics and writes them after a majority vote. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

HIT | SARA EVANS CONCERT
Country music star Sara Evans graced Bramlage Coliseum with a great concert Saturday night. Evans sang a mixture of her hit songs and donned two different K-State T-shirts throughout the night.

MISS | CLOSED FOOTBALL PRACTICES
In the past, the football team has had open practices for anyone who wants to watch the football team in action before the Spring Game. This year, however, practices have been closed, so we will have to wait for Spring Game regardless.

HIT | RELAY FOR LIFE INSIDE
Though Relay for Life was moved indoors Friday because of weather, the show went on with great success. It's great to see college students who are already busy taking time out of their schedules to participate in an event that can change lives and help others.

MISS | VANILLA ICE ARRESTED
The artist who brought us "Ice, Ice Baby" was arrested this weekend in Palm Beach, Fla., for allegedly abusing his wife. Afterward, his agent told a reporter with the Palm Beach Post that the incident was a misunderstanding.

HIT | GREEK WEEK GOES GREEN
This week's Greek Week will be highlighted by eco-friendly activities designed to educate chapters about going green. This is a step in the right direction to encourage everyone to start making better decisions for our environment.

MISS | RISING GAS PRICES
Gas in Manhattan went up to $3.29 per gallon this weekend. According to www.KansasGasPrices.com, the lowest gas in the state is $3.16 in Topeka. Manhattan is close to having the highest gas price in the state – $3.39.

'Obama Girl' paints vulgar picture of young voters

AUBREE CASPER

"Knew I had to make you mine/So black and sexy, you're so fine/I like it when you get hard/On Hillary in debate/ You'll get your head of state/You can Barack me tonight."

Unfortunately, these lyrics are not those of the newest club hit from Timbaland or Kanye West. In all sad reality, they belong to the Barack Obama superfan operating under the alias Obama Girl.

According to her MySpace.com page, Obama Girl – or Amber Lee Ettinger – is a 24-year-old model working for BarelyPolitical.com, a Web site with sexually suggestive ploys aimed at increasing voter turnout among 18 to 24 year olds (Even their multi-colored neon light logo resembles that of a flashy stripclub sign).

As if being able to rhyme was the missing piece of the puzzle when changing the minds of political cynics don't believe in the competency of young voters, Hettinger's appearance on "The Howard Stern Show" clad in nothing but a lacy bikini and a model-vs.-model pillow fight against "Giuliani Girls" in the streets of New York City must have completely restored the faith of older generations.

What is even more disappointing is the little-known fact that Ettinger isn't even the true vocalist in the song "I Got a Crush on Obama," which has garnered nearly 8 million views on YouTube.com. The credit for that goes to Leah Kauffman, according to an article in The New York Times. So let's review from here: 24-year-old model, terrible song, causing loss of faith in our generation and lip-syncing. Don't we already have Britney Spears to accomplish those daunting roles?

Yes, I do have a sense of humor, and perhaps I am a bit more offended than the average American, but so many groups have dedicated the last six to eight years to inciting a 180-degree turn of older Americans' views on the apathy of young adults when it comes to politics.

Most people who commented on the NewYorkTimes.com blog believe that Obama Girl's sex appeal will help the Obama campaign, which denies any involvement or endorsement of the video. They also believe her efforts might affect the youth vote, but this is not what's needed to help our generation when it comes to being taken seriously in the political world.

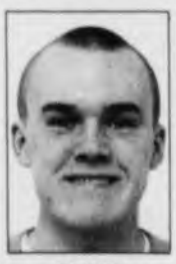
The hypocrisy accompanying Ettinger isn't helping either. City Room, a division of The New York Times, reported that the face of Obama Girl didn't even vote in February in the New York primaries. Her excuse? She wasn't registered to vote in New York, where she currently lives and she was feeling under the weather and couldn't make it over to her voting state of New Jersey.

However, in the same fashion as Britney, Ettinger was spotted out partying the same night – point proven by this classic stereotype carried out by the very person who claims to be advocating the young adult vote.

I spent my freshman and sophomore years of high school traveling Kansas and the U.S. promoting an organization called Freedom's Answer as the Kansas State coordinator.

My high-school principal even took a one-year sabbatical to help run the campaign on a national level. A nonpartisan group for high-school students beginning in 2002, Freedom's Answer had support from both sides and nationally registered hundreds of voters, many first-timers.

As it turned out, with the work of many organizations serious about changing voting habits, the national voter turnout was the highest it had been since 1972 as reported by the Federal Election Commission.



As a generation, we seek respect and approval from the political world, yet all we seem to encourage and promote is what we try to disconnect ourselves from the most. Obama Girl will continue to make music. We will continue to crank out views on the Internet of who knows what. Maybe Obama Girl will come out with some Barack-obsessed version of Soulja Boy's "Crank That," and older generations will continue not taking us as seriously as we deserve.

U.S. surpassed by other nations connecting

BLAKE OSBORN

The world is flat.

At first, this sounds like nonsense, but with technological innovations allowing nations to connect and collaborate, we really are experiencing a flattening of the world, at least in a figurative sense. As students at K-State, we can see this on our own campus where international students are taking and even teaching classes.

Thomas Friedman, columnist for The New York Times, wrote his book "The World is Flat" in 2005. He observed how, as a result of the Internet and other wireless communication devices, the playing field is being leveled between nations – and this is how the world is being flattened.

Nations from around the world, Friedman wrote, can now "plug in and play;" they can "innovate without having to emigrate." With this increase in competition, other developing nations like India and China are catching up with the U.S.

Friedman wrote that the issue with the U.S. is what we look up to. "In China today, Bill Gates is Britney Spears. In America today, Britney Spears is Britney Spears – and that is our problem," he wrote.

Americans' obsession with celebrities and the next winner of "American Idol" is in sharp contrast with the developing momentum in other countries like China. In a March 30 article in The New York Times, Roger Cohen pointed out how the baton has passed to Asia, where there is a "confidence and a burning desire to succeed. Asian business leaders are rock stars."

Both Friedman and Cohen's observations of the disparity between America and China show how real this competition is. I do not have the knowledge or scholarly acumen to elaborate in their claims. But I do agree that the U.S. needs awareness of the changing landscape of the globe.

In Cohen's article, prominent global strategist Claude Smadja agreed with Cohen as well. "[What you feel is] a burst of energy, of new dreams, and the end of the era of Western domination and the white man."

This burst of energy presents us all with an enormous challenge. Even Pope Benedict XVI is responding to the effects of globalization and modernity. According to an article from the March 24 issue of Time magazine, the Pope created a new list of seven deadly sins. They extend beyond the individual and end up creating voids in society.

This "social resonance" of sin resulting from globalization shows how much we are connected as a world, without any frontier or Manifest Destiny to carry us westward. The new direction is vertical, and it requires a new paradigm to navigate.

This unprecedented collaboration that makes geographic distances irrelevant is something to think about. No longer are students competing with people of the same nationality.

The competition has crossed even the oceans, and Americans are now part of a bigger game. So travel abroad, read the newspapers and get to know people from other countries.

They could be your future coworkers or your next boss.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Thank you, K-State Collegian, for finally mentioning the Sara Evans concert on Saturday. So excited.

Hey, Fourum. What's up with that tree on the corner of Bayberry and Campus Creek? It's like pus-ing stuff out of the trunk for weeks now. Anybody know anything?

4/20 is on the horizon.

Strap on some brass ones.

What's gross to you might be a turn-on to me.

Kansas State University has the lowest faculty salaries in the Big 12. Now that's something to be proud of.

Baby Jay, I hate to love you, but I love to hate you. Can we please get a baby Willie the Wildcat?

The weather here has more mood swings than a pregnant lady.

Ask a fifth-year. Love.

To the lady at Gumby's parking lot: We saw you pick your wedgie.

I don't care if there's no crosswalk. Pedestrians always have the right-of-way.

To the Sig Ep boys in the Derb on Thursday night: Go home. Nobody wants you here.

I walked across campus today, put on and took off my sunglasses four times and had to use my umbrella once. Give me a break, Kansas. Come on.

Baby Jay: I hate to love you, and I love to hate you.

Dude, sorry about that. My right foot kind of slipped. Thanks for stopping.

I just failed my Calc. test, so I'm calling the Fourum so I feel a little better.

So I just saw Michael Beasley at a Lakers-Clippers game on a school night. So does that mean he's going to be late to class tomorrow or what?

When you walk all the way across campus just to bum a smoke, you know you're pretty addicted.

Kansas journalists receive awards at 116th annual KPA convention

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

JUNCTION CITY – A man in his early 90s stood up to thank members of the Kansas Press Association for inducting him into the Kansas Newspaper Hall of Fame Friday evening.

The award was presented during the 116th-annual KPA convention, which took place Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Courtyard by the Marriott in Junction City.

Don McNeal, 93, received the highest KPA honor with a grateful speech full of modest comments about the 72 years he spent serving the Council Grove Republican.

"I cherish the years I've had in the newspaper business," he said.

McNeal still writes a weekly column for the Republican on his late 1980s Macintosh computer and has written more than 200,000 stories, said Doug Anstaett, KPA executive director.

K-State assistant professor of journalism and mass communications Ron Johnson received the Gaston Outstanding Mentor Award, presented by Tom Eblen, news consultant for KPA. Eblen commended Johnson for his success with newspaper redesigns.

Just before McNeal's induction, KPA President Gary Mehl gave recognition to his staff for its hard work.

"We could not function as the Kansas Press Association without the staff that we had," he said.

During his speech, Mehl spoke about the future of newspapers.

He said in the 1800s, print journalists protected themselves with guns and then fought through the introduction of radio and television.

He spoke of how nearly a year ago when he and colleagues helped the Kiowa County Signal produce a paper the Monday after a tornado destroyed its newsroom in Greensburg, Kan. He said print journalists must "put on [their] armor and face [their] foes" – the changing times being the challenge and the introduction of the Internet being the current foe.

"Yet we prevail," he said.

Mehl said his proudest moment as KPA president was when he and other volunteers walked the streets of Greensburg, handing residents their newspapers.

"That meant so much to them, because that was the only form of identity they had left," he said. "That very simple act – just walking up and down those littered streets and just handing people their daily paper – really showed me what our job is all about."

Popularity of philosophy majors on the rise

By David Griffin, Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Philosophy is becoming one of the more popular college majors across the nation. According to an April 6 article in the New York Times, philosophy is being embraced "by a new generation of college students who are drawing modern-day lessons from the age-old discipline."

This weekend, K-State hosted a philosophy symposium with keynote speakers from several universities. The symposium's title was "Naturalism in Science: Necessity or Bias?" The symposium was sponsored by the K-State department of philosophy and the K-State Center for the Understanding of Origins.

Paul Churchland from the department of philosophy at the University of California at San Diego, was one of the keynote speakers for the weekend events. Churchland spoke Friday afternoon in the Hemisphere room of Hale Library about how the physical brain works and how it can explain mental phenomenon like color experiences. He also discussed how the brain learns to recognize patterns including patterns in space, like faces, and patterns in time, like bouncing balls.

"I think philosophy is important because historically it's had an awful lot of influence and is likely to continue," Churchland said.

Churchland said he was surprised to see the information on the nation-wide growth in philosophy undergraduates in the New York Times article.

According to the College Board, there are more U.S. colleges offering undergraduate philosophy programs today than a decade ago [817, up from 765].

Churchland explained that the same increase was happening at his university. This increase was estimated to be about 10 to 15 percent and the number of students enrolled in undergraduate courses has also increased to about 15 percent, according to the article.

Churchland said the increase might be because philosophy has become more relevant. The article said that a philosophy major can help a young person make sense out of certain issues like the War in Iraq or the current presidential political debates.

Daniel Kirksey, senior in English and vice president of the KSU Philosophy club, said philosophy is helpful in understanding these issues.

"The things that they teach you are to think in a clear and consistent manner and it helps you organize information," Kirksey said.

Kirksey, one of the student coordinators for the symposium, said he enjoyed hearing from philosophy professors from across the U.S.

"The symposium was a really good opportunity for high-school science teachers to be a part of an intelligent discourse that affects Kansas," Kirksey said.

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Paul Churchland, professor of philosophy from the University of California at San Diego, speaks on human perception Friday at the Philosophy Department's Symposium themed "Naturalism in Science: Necessity or Bias?" on Friday in Hale Library's Hemisphere Room.

Better than nothing

K-State wins 1, loses 2 against Baylor

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Junior Drew Biery, argues with the umpire after he was called out on a check swing to end the game. The Wildcats lost to the Bears 3-0 on Sunday afternoon, dropping the series two games to one.

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State took on Baylor over the weekend in a three-game series, losing two of three to the Bears.

The Wildcats (16-18, 3-9 Big 12 Conference) only scored a total 10 runs for the entire weekend and were shut out in the last game. The pitchers did their jobs by only giving up nine runs in three games, but it wasn't enough.

FRIDAY: K-STATE 6, BAYLOR 1

Offense was nowhere to be found for both teams at the beginning of the game on Friday, but the Wildcats pulled away late for a 6-1 victory.

Neither team put a run on the scoreboard until the seventh inning when Baylor's Beamer Weems crushed a pitch over the right-field wall.

K-State responded in a big way, with four runs in the bottom of the seventh off of four singles and an error by Baylor's third baseman Shaver Hansen.

"We came back and responded," coach Brad Hill said. "That was the big thing. They made a mistake, and we capitalized on it, which I thought was big."

Junior Byron Wiley had one of the biggest hits of the inning. Wiley has struggled this year with a .136 batting average and second on the team strikeouts while playing 10 less-games. A former All-Big 12 player, Wiley stepped up to the plate and grounded through the gap to put the ball into right field knocking in the game winning run.

While the bats took a while to warm up, K-State's pitchers were on from the very beginning. Starter Brad Hutt threw six and two-thirds innings only giving up four hits and one run. Senior Chase Bayuk (1-2) came in to finish out the seventh and recorded the win.

The Wildcats added two more in the eighth with back-to-back doubles by freshman Jason King and junior Drew Biery. Biery knocked King in, and Biery scored on a wild pitch.

Winds were gusting, and K-State had a game plan to adjust to the wind, but in the end, mother nature and timely hitting led Baylor (22-13, 8-7 Big 12) to a 5-4 victory over the Wildcats.

Kansas Cup to reside once again with Cats

By staff report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Cup once again will reside in Manhattan after the K-State rowing team defeated rival Kansas this weekend in Kansas City, Kan.

KU paddled its way to an early lead in the 10th-annual Kansas Cup by winning both the novice races.

The early victories gave the Jayhawks an 8-0 lead in the overall event.

The second varsity squad for the Wildcats followed by winning their race against KU by a margin of more than three seconds.

In the final race of the day, the first varsity crew for K-State also came away with a victory over the Jayhawks by more than six seconds, giving the Wildcats enough points to capture the overall Kansas Cup by a score of 13-8.

Saturday's victory gives the Wildcats the season sweep of their in-state rival after defeating the Jayhawks last November in the Sunflower Showdown.

This is the third time in four years that the Wildcats have won the Kansas Cup.

Next up for K-State will be the Southern IRAs at Oak Ridge, Tenn., on Friday.

TRACK AND FIELD

Cats add to regional qualifiers in El Paso

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Led by sprinters and jumpers, the track and field team returned from the UTEP Invitational in El Paso, Texas, with six top-three finishes, 11 personal bests and five new regional qualifiers.

Seniors Donniece Parrish and Marnyka Honeycutt earned regional qualifying marks in the 100-meter dash, finishing third and fourth, respectively. Parrish finished in a time of 11.70, and Honeycutt crossed th0e finish line in 11.75; both are personal bests.

"Both of them, I thought, ran well," said coach Cliff Rovelto. "These were obviously their best performances this year, so we were really pleased."

Parrish won the title in the 200-meter dash, by running a personal best time of 23.50. She had earned a regional qualifying mark earlier in the season, but improved from 11th to sixth in the national standings with her run on Saturday. Her time places her third all-time in the K-State outdoor record books. Honeycutt took seventh in the event and beat her previous best time by more than two tenths of a second. Her time of 24.24 moves her to seventh in the K-State record books.

The Wildcat women earned two more qualifying marks in the jumps. Freshman Nina Kokot grabbed a qualifying mark in the long jump, leaping a distance of 20-03.50.

Freshman Tiara Walpool took fourth in the triple jump, spanning a distance of 41-09.25. It was her first jump of the season and earned her a trip to the Midwest Regionals in Lincoln, Neb., on May 30.

"She obviously jumped really well," Rovelto said. "She had three jumps that were a foot farther than what she had ever jumped before, so we were real pleased with that."

Junior Scott Sellers reached a regional qualifying mark for the third time this year in the high jump. Sellers won the event, soaring over the bar at 7-04.50. Freshman Michael Healey took sixth, and tied his previous personal best clearing the bar at 6-10.75.

"I think [Healey] has done a good job, but I also think he's capable of continuing to jump higher," Rovelto said.

Junior Mike Myer earned regional qualifying marks in the 100 and 200-meter dash. He took seventh in the 100-meter dash with a time of 10.50. In the 200-meter dash Myer clocked a time of 21.09 to finish fourth.

A handful of Wildcats also competed in the KT Woodman Invitational in Wichita. The meet was scheduled for Saturday, but was postponed until Sunday because of severe wind.

Senior Bryce Bergman took the title in the pole vault clearing the bar at 4.90 meters. The meet at marked only the second time Bergman has competed for the Wildcats all season, because he did not have indoor eligibility, and he battled injuries at the beginning of the outdoor season.

Junior Emily Dittemore grabbed a second place finish for the Wildcats in Wichita when she finished the 1,500-meter run in a time of 4:51.65.

Decision day for Beasley now upon anticipating K-State fans

Today is the day Michael Beasley will let K-State fans know his answer.

JOEL JELLISON

Will he go to the NBA where he could possibly be the No. 1 pick in June's NBA draft, or will he stay with the Wildcats and continue breaking every record that stands in his way?

Going into the 5 p.m. deadline the freshman forward set for himself, there stand no clues to what Beasley will do.

He has had time following the Wildcats' season-ending loss to Wisconsin in the second round of the NCAA tournament to determine what his choice will be and spent this past weekend trying to finalize his plan.

The truth is, Beasley might not know what his final decision will be until he finally reaches his scheduled press conference.

It might be hard for K-State fans to watch Beasley go, but it won't be as surprising as the loss of Bob Huggins last season when he decided to bolt to West Virginia. This question around the basketball program has been one that arose from the moment Beasley announced his intentions to become a Wildcat.

Beasley has received help from family and advisers about his NBA decision, but one aspect always has been clear about him. Beasley never has wanted to do anything he feels he is forced into. Just ask reporters who waited for him after practice to find he didn't want to talk.

Stick the prospect of being a millionaire under the nose of a freshman, and see what they do.

Whether it be for money or just the prospect of playing in the best basketball league in the world, more and more underclassmen are making the decision to leave early.

It is hard to put yourself in the shoes of a player like Beasley – or any other player who has declared for the draft over the past few weeks – but can you honestly say you wouldn't go for the draft if given the opportunity?

I planned on looking into the draft myself, but given the fact that I have not played a minute of college ball and my overall lack of previous basketball experience, I realized it was best to stay at K-State and finish college.

I probably wouldn't even have gotten an invitation to the pre-draft workouts.

But for Beasley, this is not an issue, and the only aspect he would have to worry about is whether the lottery pick would fall to a team that would rather have a point guard like Derrick Rose.

No matter what decision Beasley makes this afternoon, K-State fans can be thankful for the freshman season that brought life to the K-State basketball program.

The K-State women's tennis team lost to No. 33 Texas A&M and No. 20 Texas over the weekend.

K-State's losing streak extends

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The losing streak for the K-State women's tennis team continued this weekend with losses to Intercollegiate Tennis Association's No. 33-ranked Texas A&M and No. 20-ranked Texas, but through it all, signs of progress were evident.

The Aggies decisively controlled the match, rolling to a 7-0 win on Friday. Senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova fought A&M's Tiffany Clifford and Anna Blagodarova to the tie-breaker in No. 1 doubles, but fell, 8-9.

At No. 1 singles, senior Viviana Yrureta lost to No. 75-ranked Elze Potgieter 5-7, 2-6.

Freshman Vanessa Cottin also played a close match against Clifford but came up short at No. 4, 3-6, 2-6.

"We didn't do as well as I'd hoped," coach Steve Bietau said. "Some of it was us, and some of it was A&M being awfully strong."

The match pushed the Aggies to a 14-0 overall mark in the series against the Wildcats.

During the Wildcats' match against the Longhorns on Sunday, there was a slight reversal of fortunes. K-State notched the doubles point but still lost the match, 1-6. It was the Longhorns' 15th straight win over the Wildcats.

Texas jumped out to an early lead toward winning the doubles point after Maggie Mello and Courtney Zauft defeated freshman Antea Huljev and Cottin, 8-5. The Wildcats then fought back as Kudlackova and Klimova upset No. 21 Vanja Corovic and Marija Milic, 9-7. The doubles point was clinched after Yrureta and sophomore Natasha Vieira topped Stephanie Davison and Caroline Larsson, 9-7.

"It was huge for us," Bietau said. "For us to have any thought of competing it was necessary. More importantly, it was a clear step up for our doubles team. We had been playing strong recently, and it was a good sign."

In singles play, the Longhorns notched all six wins. At No. 1 singles, Yrureta took Corovic, ranked No. 64 in singles, to a third set before losing, 6-4, 0-6, 3-6. Freshman Pauline Guemas also took her match at No. 6 singles to a third set before she fell, 2-6, 6-3, 4-6. The other matches were close, but yielded no success for the Wildcats.

"We were obviously very happy how doubles went," Bietau said. "We had the best of both worlds there. Previously we had a concern with our players attitude, but they handled themselves well in a hostile environment. I wasn't happy to lose 6-1, but attitude-wise, we are making progress. We did get a couple of sets in singles and showed progress there. But, lots of work needs to be done and the rest will take care of itself."

K-State (6-12, 2-7) now has two matches on the horizon before the Big 12 tournament. The Wildcats will play their final home match Friday against Iowa State. The match will begin at 3 p.m. and will be the final home match for Yrureta and Klimova. Bietau said it is always an emotional time of the year to send the seniors off. A match at Nebraska will end the regular season for the Wildcats, which will take place at 1 p.m. Sunday at the Nebraska Tennis Center. Bietau said he is satisfied with the direction the team is going.

Japanese Festival features anime, calligraphy

Learning how to play Japanese board games was just one of the many activities available at the Central Kansas Japanese Festival this weekend.

To bring the cultures from the "Land of the Rising Sun," also known as Japan, to the heartland, more than 100 Manhattan community members and K-State students gathered at the annual Central Kansas Japanese Festival this weekend.

The festival, which took place at the K-State Student Union Saturday, featured a variety of activities and workshops, including martial arts; tea ceremonies; calligraphy; igo, a board game; shogi, Japanese chess; origami; anime and manga; omatsuri, or carnival games; cultural displays; and Japanese food sales.

The festival served as an ending event to the week-long celebration of International Week.

LeAnne Russel, junior in political science and president of Japanese Appreciation Association, said planning the festival is a year-long process, and they started planning it in the fall.

Performances included storytelling by Kuniko Yamamoto, a taiko drum performance, and Yosakoi-Soran dance by K-State's Yosakoi Dance Club. Students in the Japanese Language Program performed skits, and local Japanese children led festival-goers in a Bon-Odori dance.

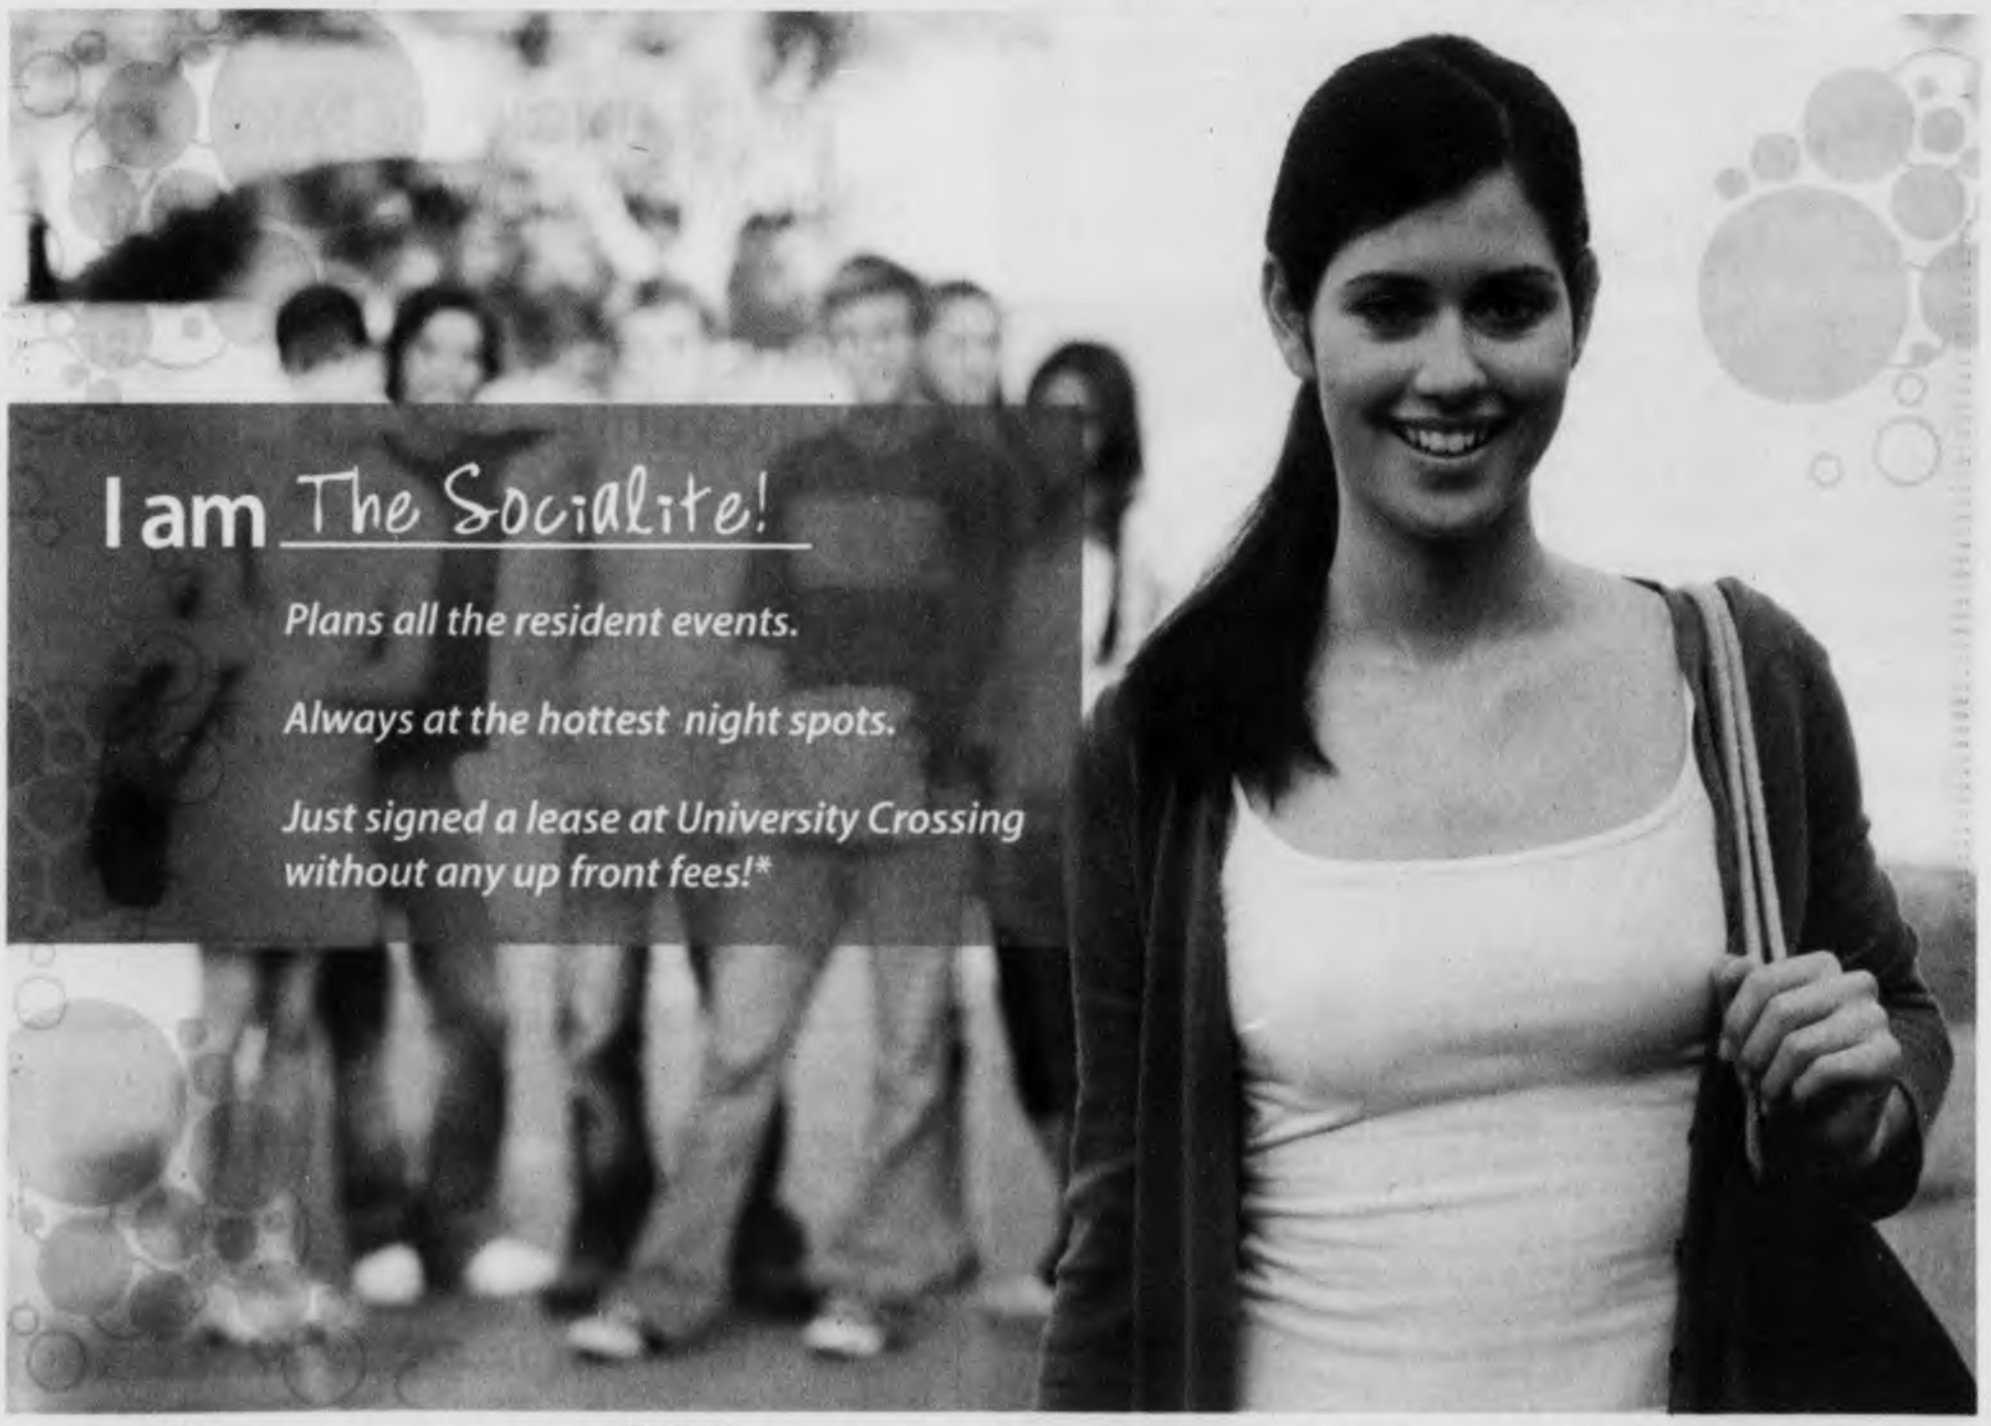
Some of festival's sponsors were the Union Programming Council, Student Governing Association and Office of International Programs.

Children were able to learn Japanese and get their names written in calligraphy at the Japanese Language Speech room. They were also able to listen to K-State students tell Japanese stories using picture cards.

Members of the Aikido Club demonstrated simple routines from the nonviolent martial art, like how to fall safely and also how to maintain balance.

The Tea Ceremony, which is also known as a Sado, attracted about 35 people who sampled thin green tea an hour and half before the ceremony began.

The ceremony was a demonstration of how to make the thick green tea and how to serve it.



Toys, T-shirts, books, fans and origami were among the items sold at Bazaar, in a Japanese marketplace setting. There was also traditional art on display, and the K-State Yosakoi Dance Club had a table set up for recruitment.

The students that attended the festival had different reasons for attending. Jenna Vorndran, junior in biology, helped plan the event last year and said she was interested in seeing this year's turnout and wanted to learn more about Japanese culture.

Reiko Shirato, junior in business management and member of Japanese Student Association, said her motivation to go to the festival was to tell Japanese culture instead of modern culture.

Gun-control advocate shares thoughts on laws, concealed carry

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the second part of a two-part question-and-answer story. The first part was an interview with a pro-gun advocate, this week the subject is a gun control advocate.

Pam Kapoor is an administrator for a pro-gun control Facebook.com group and a self-employed communications consultant. Here's what Kapoor had to say:

How do you interpret the Second Amendment?

The Bill of Rights was never intended to let governments off any proverbial hook in terms of preventing violence by monitoring who owns guns, how many and why. The Second Amendment is not about anarchistic, unfettered access to guns, yet gun lovers seem to believe they have the God-given right to "bear" any type or number of weapons without having to answer for them. It is utterly nonsensical that a society should not endeavor to protect communities through gun-control legislation.

How effective are gun-control laws?

When enforced, extremely. The most important aspect of gun-control legislation is the screening of applicants. In Canada, the process of gun-control licensing and registry is no different than that for cars, and has succeeded in screening a high number of dangerous people who otherwise would have had access to guns. The statistics speak for themselves: Firearm violence has dropped significantly since the introduction of gun control in Canada. In the U.S., the firearm homicide rate is 7.9 percent higher than ours, while the handgun homicide rate is a staggering 14.5 percent higher.

Can any gun control laws go too far?

Not as long as they remain focused on the primary objectives of screening owners and registering and tracking guns so that law enforcement can do its job more effectively.

What about the slippery-slope theory? Will taking away peoples' guns lead to taking away other rights?

Give me a break. The slippery-slope argument has no place here. We register other possessions and apply for licenses for things like driving, fishing, software and dogs. Gun lovers need to suck it up already. Anyone who wants to be secretive about their weapons should be a concern to us all.

Are you for eliminating guns completely or just better regulating who can have them?

I am a gun hater who is pro-gun control.

How do you feel about concealed carry?

I think the concealed carry fosters feelings of fear and anxiety in our society, not safety.

Iraqi speaker strives to educate audience, eliminate common misunderstandings of Islam

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Shiekh Shakir Alani made an attempt to eliminate misunderstandings of and educate others about Islam during his speech titled "The Common Misconceptions About Islam" on Friday in the K-State Student Union's Big 12 room.

The event was organized by the Muslim Student Association of K-State, and the talk was open to students and Manhattan residents.

Alani, who is originally from Iraq, has a doctorate degree in engineering and also has completed a degree in Shari'ah law, a fundamental Islamic law of governing.

The speaker emphasized that he is discussing Islam and not Muslims, who sometimes misrepresent Islam, he said.

"I'm not in a position to defend Muslims," Alani said. "They are human beings, who are subject to mistakes, to violence, just like other people in society."

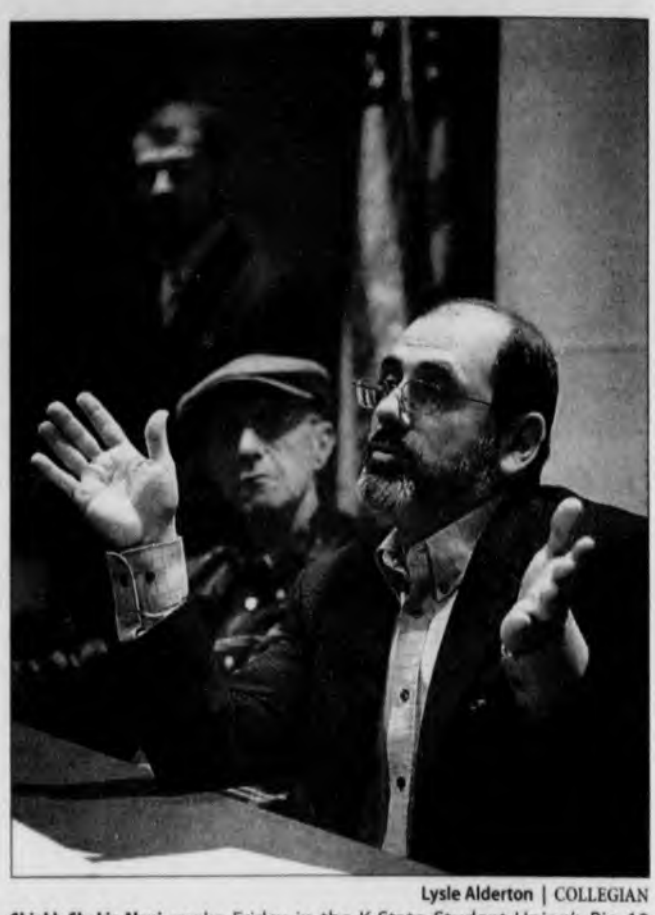
During a two-hour lecture followed by a question-and-answer session, the speaker explained the basics of Islam. He touched upon topics that evoked discussion, like connections between Islam and other religions, its history, prayers and practices, human rights, men's and women's clothing, food, marriage and more.

He gave a brief overview of Shari'ah law and described it as a "balanced system between a person and society."

Alani told the audience that Islam is not a violent, aggressive or dangerous religion. From the other side, he also explained that it is not a passive religion – people are supposed to fight to protect themselves, their land and their way of life.

"Harming the neighbor is definitely outside the circles of Islam; it doesn't fit," Alani said. "The Quran says, 'If you killed one soul without a reason, you have killed the whole humanity. If you saved one soul you saved the whole humanity.'"

For mutual intercultural understanding, Alani said it is important to understand that Islam is not a terrorist religion and the term 'holy war' is inaccurate.



Moreover, he said the Islam religion believes people who commit suicide, including suicide bombers, are sent to to Hell, not to Heaven like the media often portrays, he said.

"None of these 19 people who made an attack on September 11 belonged to any Muslim community; none of them attended a mosque. Only a few know this fact. But since then, our communities have to pay a very heavy price," he said.

Alani admitted that the number of people who choose Islam is growing in America and Europe and that it is not a threat to non-Muslim countries.

"We can respect each other regardless of what we believe," Alani said.

For whatever reason visitors attended this event, the general response was that the event was helpful and raised awareness about Islam.

Lysle Alderton | COLLEGIAN
Shiekh Shakir Alani spoke Friday in the K-State Student Union's Big 12 room on righting peoples' misconceptions about Islam.

"I had some questions, so I was pleased to be here and clear some misconceptions I had," said Herve Oyenan, graduate student in computer science.

He said he has many Muslim friends and this lecture helped to understand their beliefs better.

"I am an American who didn't know anything about Muslims or Islam before I spent some time in another country and got to know them better," said Judy Roe, research associate in agronomy.

"I'm trying to understand why Americans don't know what Islam is really about. The more I can learn about Islam, the more I can transmit to other people in this country."

Hosting game night for friends inexpensive, simple

Whether it's because of research papers, grade-determining exams or just the repetitive routine, everyone tends to get stressed toward the end of the semester. Enjoying a game night is a budget-friendly way to get your head out of the textbooks and socialize with friends.

KELSEY NOEL

THE GUEST LIST

First, choose a handful of people to invite. Consider the size of your living space – if you live in a small apartment, 20 guests might be too many. Be sure to give them a few days' notice so they can plan to attend. Choose friends who are comfortable around you and each other. Let them know they need to wear comfortable clothing – like jeans and a T-shirt – and that they can bring along their favorite games, if they choose.

THE GROCERY LIST

With all of the physical and mental exertions your friends will make, they will appreciate any refreshments you provide. Set out some healthy snacks that don't require any silverware like pretzels, tortilla chips, fruits and vegetables. That way, no one has to quit playing to nibble, and you have little mess to attend to later.

As for drinks, I again suggest you consider how much cleaning up you want to do. The best choice would be bottled drinks like water, juice and soda. If you're not worried about spills, have everyone write their name on plastic cups and fill them as they wish.

THE LAUNDRY LIST

Be sure the play area you have chosen is clean. No one wants to crawl around your dirty laundry to find a seat. Whether your game night is in a residence hall living area or your own living room, be sure the furniture is arranged like you want it. If you're playing team games, arrange an opening down the center of the room. If you want everyone to sit on the floor, simply move the furniture out of the way.

No matter what you are organizing, your home should be guest ready. Do whatever it takes to make it something you can be proud of in front of your friends.

THE 'PLAY' LIST

There are several types of games out there, so don't hinder the fun by only playing one. Though "Monopoly" can be exhilarating for the first two hours, your guests might get bored trying to finish it.

You could begin the evening with a high-energy game in which people work in teams – I recommend "Catch Phrase" or "Guesstures." This way, no one is put on the spot for too long. Also, I have yet to play either of those games without erupting in laughter.

If you're in the mood to use some brain power, bring out games like "Scrabble" or "Scattergories." If not, set up your DVD player and play your favorite version of "Scene It?"

Make a deck of cards readily available, as well. Many times, there will be a couple people who prefer less active games like Blackjack or "Uno."

When it comes to choosing games for your game night, the possibilities are endless. Bring the whole stack of favorites out of your hall closet and be willing to let your guests choose. Just make sure someone knows the rules well enough to explain them to everyone else. Most importantly, don't have a minute-by-minute plan for the evening. Go with the flow. After all, the purpose of a game night is to relax.

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Sex, relationship myths about homosexuals often false

A straight guy comes of age, and his father gets him a Playboy magazine and some lube. A gay guy comes of age, and what does his father get him? An ice pack and some aspirin.

MATT COMBES

Though homosexuals belong to a part of society that still is not overly accepted, discussion of our sex lives – or the notions of what our sex lives are – appear in jokes and pop-culture references all the time. However, are gays and lesbians nothing more than the derogatory terms used so often in our society?

A common misconception is that all male/male homosexual couples engage in frequent anal sex. According to "Go Ask Alice," a popular sexuality and health question-and-answer Internet service sponsored by Columbia University, anal sex is not a prerequisite for being a homosexual man.

"Conversely, being a gay man is not a mandate for enjoying anal sex. Many gay men do not have anal sex," according to goaskalice.columbia.edu. "In fact, oral sex and mutual masturbation are more common than anal stimulation among gay men in long-term relationships."

This thought can be important for gay men just coming out who feel pressured to engage in anal sex because of society's misconceptions and the porn industry's obsession with back-door play.

In fact, a study written in the British Medical Journal found that about two-thirds of male/male couples engage in anal sex. Referencing my earlier column on anal sex along with the BMJ article, "This means that, in absolute numbers, there are more heterosexuals having anal sex than there are gay men."

So if gay men are not all about the anus, why be gay? Being gay is about more than just sex.

It is a connection that goes far beyond a physical attraction and is more concerned with emotional boundaries.

On the other end of the spectrum is the thought that all lesbians whip out a strap-on, or in the words of the Midwest Teen Sex Show, "Make like arts and crafts and scissor."

Yet again, though a predominant fantasy of heterosexual adolescent males, this is not exactly true.

According to "Go Ask Alice; What two women do in bed is as varied as the many women we know. Two women may kiss and hug, caress each other's bodies for hours or have quick sex," according to the site. "Some women may get pleasure from penetration while others may pass on it."

A final misconception is that all homosexuals – mostly men – are rampantly promiscuous. This one is – in all honesty – a bit more complex to dispel. Reports and studies have found an array of results – all to be taken with a grain of salt.

Both sides of the fence are represented, saying either gay men are no more promiscuous than their heterosexual counterparts or they are. In other words, coming to a conclusion is difficult. However, the generalization of all homosexuals being promiscuous can be dispelled as many long-term homosexual couples, along with celibate and abstinent homosexuals, do exist.

In the end – once you get past the same-genitals issue – homosexuals are no different than heterosexuals when it comes to matters of the bedroom.

Rappers, steppers participate in Showcase

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Songs of worship and voices of praise echoed Saturday night in the K-State Student Union's Union Station as Beta Sigma Chi Christian Sorority Inc. had its second-annual Christian Artist Showcase.

With performances ranging from rapping to stepping, the showcase was a way for people to display their talents to those on campus and in the community.

"The main purpose was to get the gospel out in our community and on campus," said Beta Sigma Chi sorority social chair Maleika Robinson. "We really want to reach the hearts of the people, because I know that a lot of people think that Christianity is a boring thing and that they only see it in church."

Robinson, senior in social sciences, said the showcase first started last year in hopes to spread the gospel while displaying the gifts and talents God has given people. Last year, Beta Sigma Chi held auditions for the showcase, but this year, the group decided to invite different groups from outside Manhattan.

"We are always trying to get out there just so that we can get out there and minister to young and old," said showcase participant Sheree Wheaton.

Wheaton, along with six other women, call themselves V.I.B.E., Victorious In Being Excellent. V.I.B.E., which was founded by Wheaton in 2001 in Kansas City, Mo., did a Christian step performance. They used different steps from historically black greek organizations, and they also created some of their own.

"I think that it's another good way of praise and worship," she said. "We have blessed so many different youngsters within their church to start something, and that's what we are about."

V.I.B.E. was one of the few groups that traveled from Kansas City to participate in the showcase. Christian rap duo Dry Bonez Live from Kansas City, Mo., immediately grabbed the audience's attention with its special style and their heartfelt lyrics.

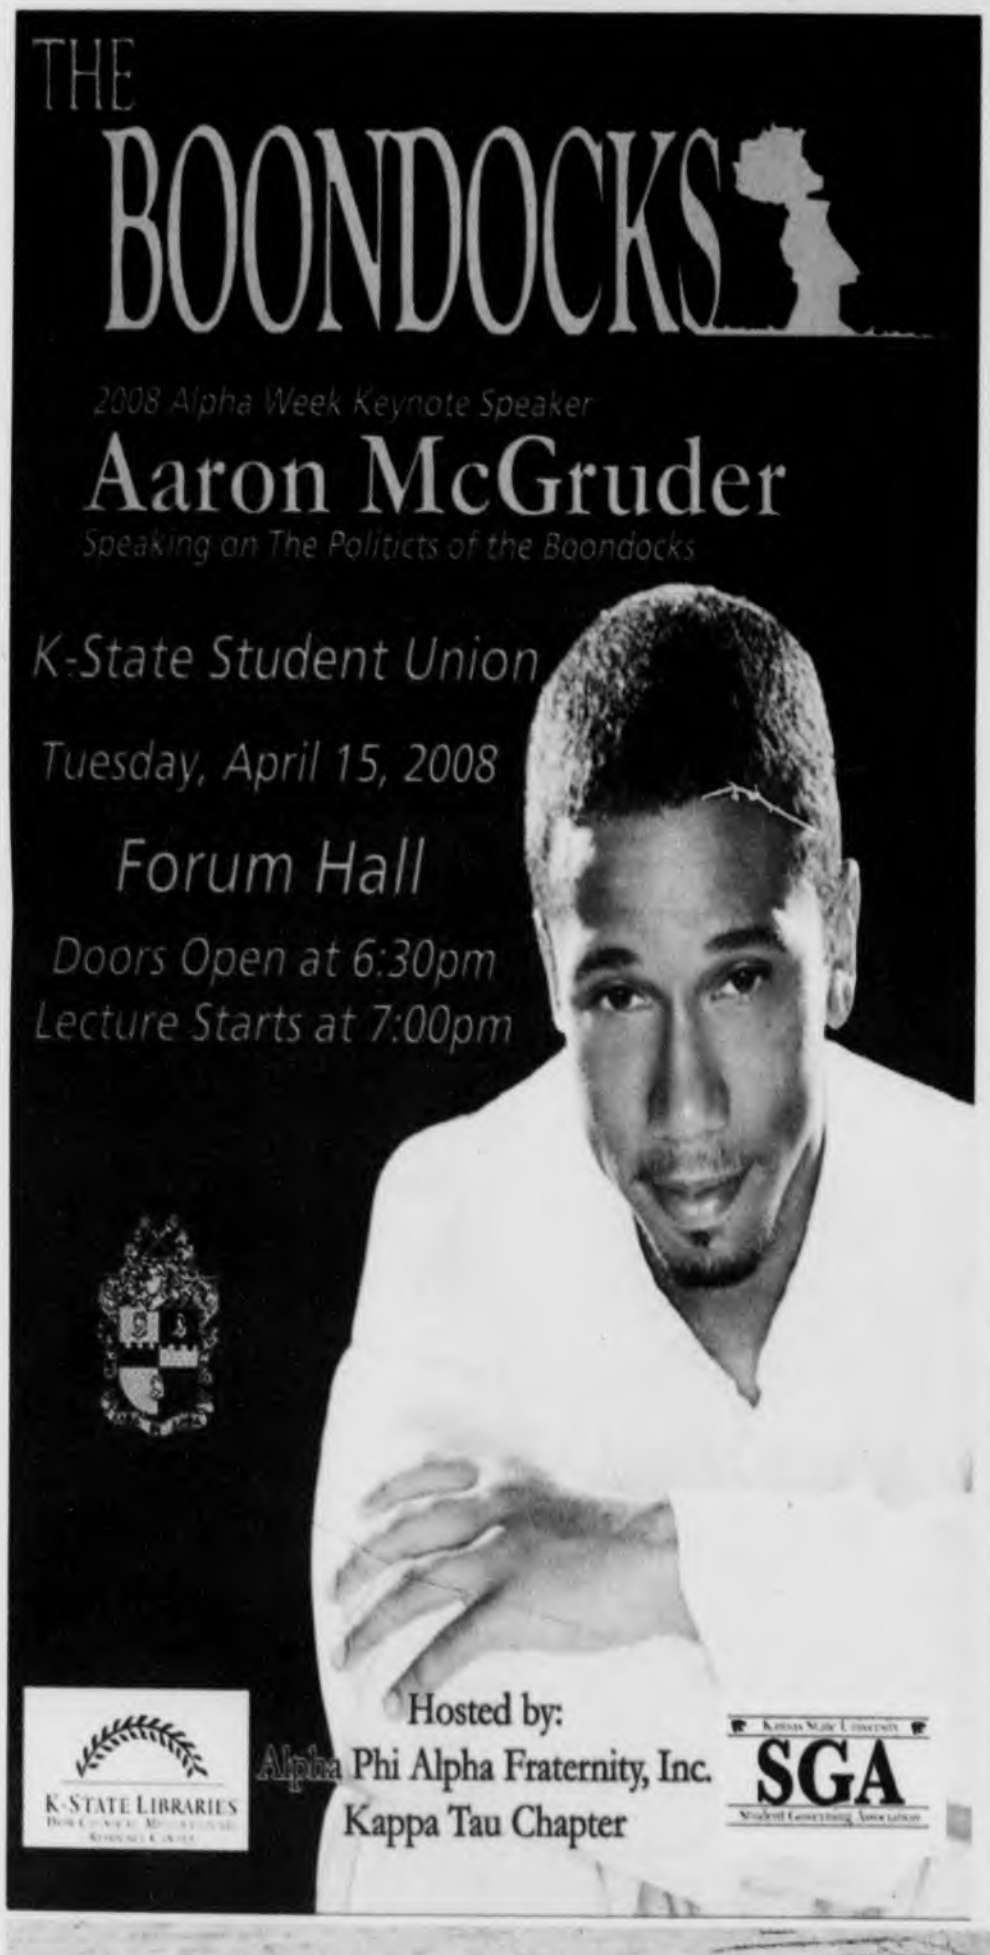
Joseph "1-Lyfe" Chavez and Edward "PeeDee" Wright are the two teenagers who make up the duo. Chavez said their name, Dry Bonez Live, derives from the Bible scripture Ezekiel 37:1-10, in which Ezekiel sees a transformation in a valley of dry bones after following the words of God.

"We took on that name because that's what we want to do to our generation," he said. "We feel like, spiritually speaking, we're all in a kind of dead state, and we just basically want to give the words that God has given to us – but then whether it be on stage or over CD – just proclaim those words to people and hopefully life will come from that."

Chavez, 19, and Wright, 18, have worked together for six years, but officially as a group since October after being signed to Kingdom City Records.

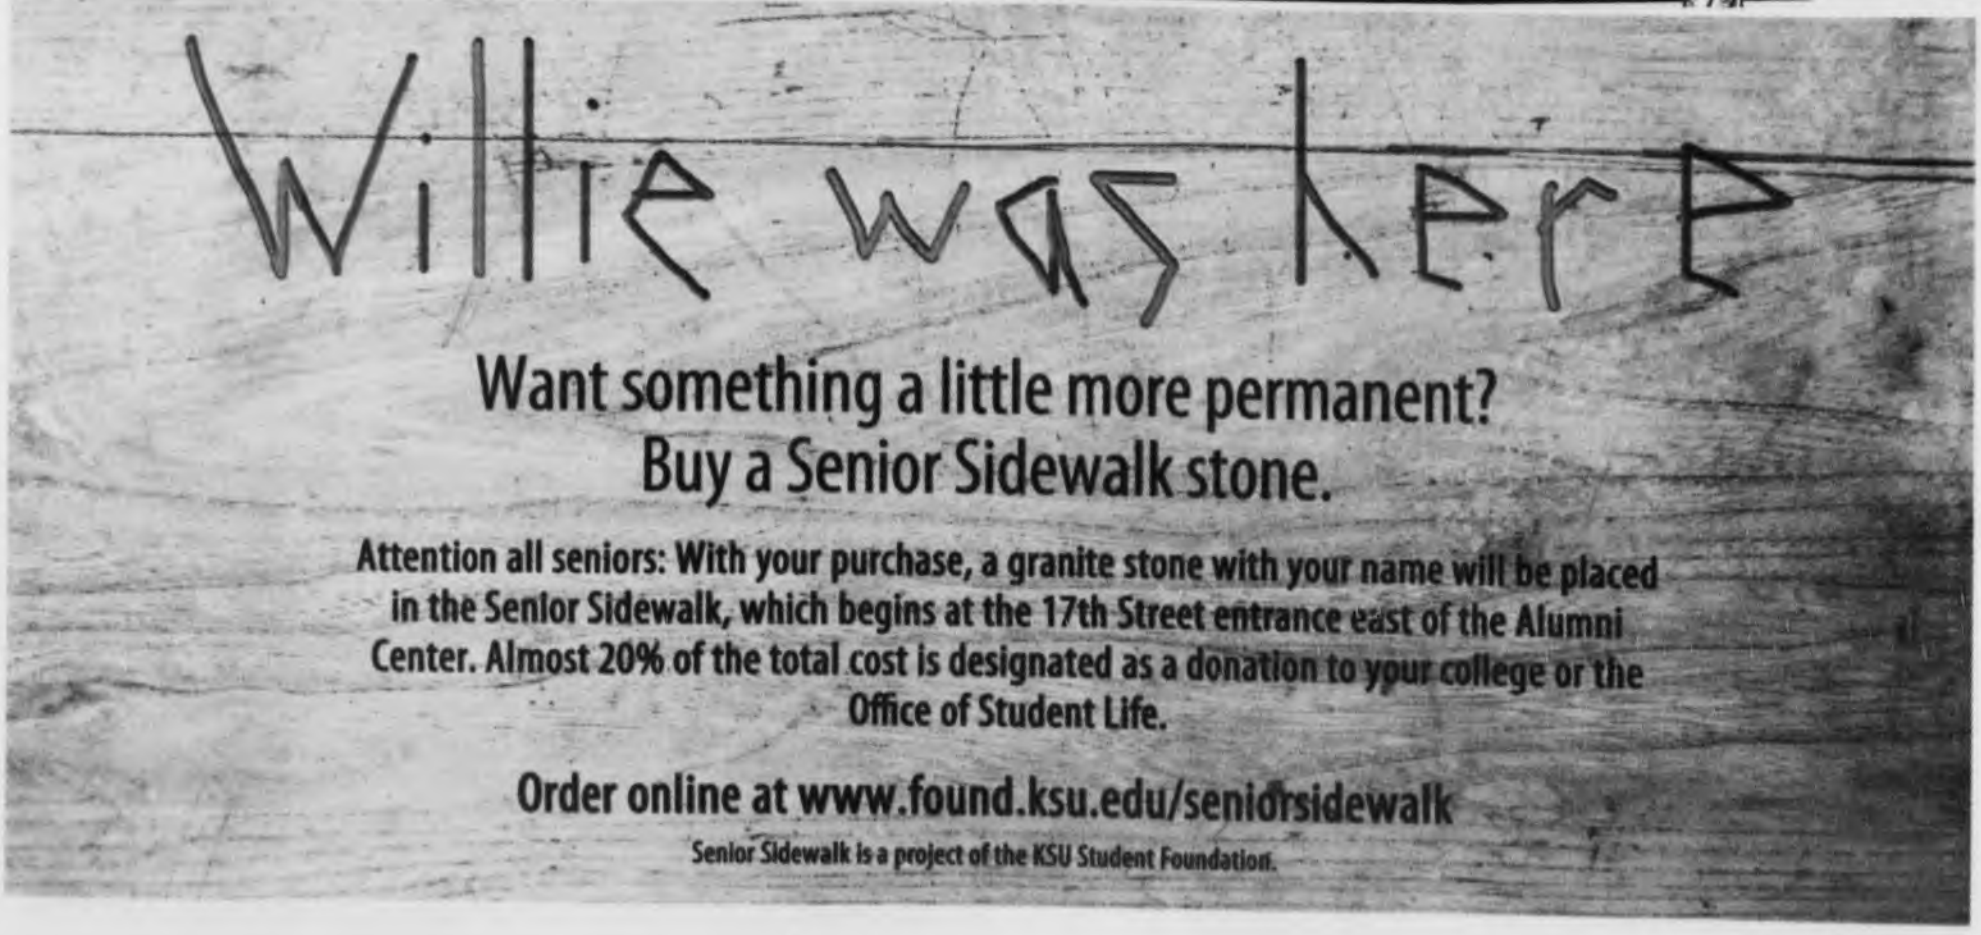
The vice president of the label informed them about the showcase, and they were excited to come and minister to K-State, Wright said. With their first album release date set for April 26, the showcase is one of the many shows Dry Bonez Live has been participated in.

The members face many distractions and temptations everyday, they said.



"We definitely try to just keep our eyes fixed on the cross and try not to sway," Wright said. "With parties and alcohol and drugs, it's not easy, but how we fight it is we just don't put ourselves in those situations. We just don't go, and we stand out."

The members of Dry Bonez Live said they want to encourage the community of Manhattan and the students of K-State to stay focused and to keep God first.



"Being here at K-State, I can imagine there's a lot of temptations that goes on here, a lot of things that a believer shouldn't partake in," Chavez said. "Stay in your word and continue to seek God, because when we have our eyes focused on the God who created the universe, there's no way that something like temporary pleasure can come in and knock God off of that top spot."

NBA-prospect Beasley reminiscent of K-State Basketball Alumnus Boozer

Michael Beasley is not K-State's only super-star basketball player. In the 1950s, another athlete, Bob Boozer, claimed the All-America title, swept the basketball floor and went on to play professionally. The following article was written by Gregg Coonrod, taken from the Feb. 4, 1981, Collegian and describes Boozer's career, which sounds much like the path Beasley is about to follow.

K-STATE HERO RETAINS MEMORIES OF DAYS PAST

The secretary answers the telephone, "Mr. Boozer's office."

Sitting a door away from his secretary at the Northwestern Bell Telephone offices in Omaha, Neb., Mr. Boozer lifts the receiver and reverts from Mr. Boozer to the days of Bob Boozer – basketball player.

While Bob Boozer's name has been replaced on the lips of basketball fans by more recent talents including Mike Evans and Rolando Blackman, it's still lodged in the K-State record books.

The 6-foot-8 forward, who played at K-State from 1956-59, has the single-season and Ahearn Field House scoring records as well as the top career scoring average of 21.9 points per game.

Being one of the most successful athletes to rise out of K-State, Boozer might be given credit for consummating the marriage of K-State and basketball.

During his reign as Wildcat basketball star, Boozer was named to the All-Big 8 team three times and All-American twice. He combined with another All-American, Jack Parr, in the 1957-58 season to help lead the Cats to a fourth-place finish in the NCAA tournament.

Then, in 1959, Boozer teamed up with Wally Frank, Don Matuszak, Cedric Price and Steve Douglas for a 25-2 season, 14-0 in conference play while grabbing the No. 1 ranking in both the AP and UPI polls.

Now 43, Boozer sees the importance of the time he didn't spend on the basketball court in Ahearn.

"I was basically at K-State for an education. I enjoyed going to classes," Boozer said.

Boozer mentioned a number of teachers and professors he had during his collegiate career. He especially remembers an anthropology professor named Dr. Wilcox who taught a class on ancient civilization. Boozer explained going to Rome to play in the Olympics and seeing all the things they had talked about in class.

"I really felt as though my maturity as a ballplayer and a human being occurred at K-State," Boozer said. "The professors were involved as much as the coaches."

His college degree undoubtedly has contributed to his career of businessman.

When Boozer left 11 years of professional basketball behind, he landed a middle-management position with Northwestern Bell Telephone, a division of the Bell Telephone Co. serving North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska.

Advancing in the ranks, Boozer's position is division manager in charger of customer relations and city-county lobbyist for the company within the Omaha district.

Boozer feels secure with his position. It wasn't always that way with basketball though.

"Basketball is very unstable," he said. "Success depends on winning and nothing else.

"I never considered coaching. Not at all. There's no security in it either. I saw coaches who thought they had a secure job and then one losing season came along, and they were out."

If he wanted a coaching job, Boozer definitely had the experience necessary.

After graduation he went on to play for Caterpillar Tractor Co. in Peoria, Ill. The team was the AAU champion and three of its members, including Boozer, were chosen for the 1960 U.S. Olympic team.

The Cincinnati Royals (the current Kansas City Kings) of the National Basketball Association made the tall Midwest boy with the unstoppable jump shot their first round choice.

Boozer's pro career, while successful, was spotted with trades. He played for six clubs in 11 years, spending no more than three seasons in any one city.

Cincinnati traded Boozer to the New York Knicks to make room for up-and-coming Jerry Lucas. From the Knicks, he went to Los Angeles and was picked up there by Chicago in the Bulls' dispersal draft.

According to Boozer, the three seasons with the Bulls, 1966-69, were the highlight of his pro career. He led the team in shooting percentage all three seasons and scoring the last two while averaging 20.4 points a game. The K-State grad was named to the 1968 NBA All-Star team and stands seventh in total points and 10th in rebounds on the Bulls all-time list.

K-State's all-American Bob Boozer breaks through a specially-constructed hoop at the K-State - Kansas game. Boozer tore the Jayhawks just like he tore this hoop as the Wildcats defeated the Hawks, 82-72.

Boozer is now running the hardwood with a group of ex-college players called the "Old Timers" in an over-30 league. The team has won the league championship four straight years, dropping only one game since Boozer's arrival.

Self-storage units provide space for students', soldiers' items during summer

Matt Binter | COLLEGIAN

Storage facilities can be useful for students wanting to leave some possessions in Manhattan over the summer break, but their growing demand toward the end of the semester makes them a scarcity.

By Lacy Skinner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Summer is drawing near, and college students who do not want to take all their belongings back home might opt to rent a self-storage unit, but those who choose to do so should move quickly before the storage facilities are full.

Students use the facilities when they are getting ready to leave for the summer, and soldiers use them when they are deploying, said Moreen Morgan, manager of Amherst Self-Storage.

Self-storage units are a convenient way for students to store lamps, lofts, futons and other large furnishings from their residence-hall rooms or apartments for the summer without the hassle of transporting it to and from home. However, students should begin looking for storage space at least several weeks before the summer begins.

Morgan said Amherst receives eight customer calls per day.

Storage space is in high demand because of the number of deployed troops and the number of college students residing in Manhattan.

"I would suggest students reserve 30 days ahead before the end of classes, like in April," said Ronald Ford, owner of FM Storage LLC. He only has eight or nine units available because of the deployment of troops. Ford's units are located on Crown Centre Circle in Manhattan.

There are at least 10 self-storage rental companies populating the Manhattan area.

Commissioner Bob Strawn said the units, while sometimes large, will not be placed inappropriately.

"The city setup is zoned already," Strawn said. If someone wants to start a self-storage rental company, "the city commissioners rule on that, but the city wouldn't change zoning."

Self-storage facilities are put in industrial areas and where they wouldn't be a burden. A self-storage facility would not be across the street from the K-State Alumni Center, Strawn said.

Because there is a selection of self-storage rental companies in Manhattan, students have a broader selection on which company is right for them, whether the decision is based on size, cost or security.

"We have the best surveillance video in town," Ford said. "We have 22 video cameras on DVR and have not had any incidences."

Despite the bulky size, self-storage facilities will be around for a long time, Morgan said.

"People just have a lot of stuff," Morgan said.

LOCAL STORAGE UNITS

Ronald Ford, owner of FM Storage recommended storage unit sizes depending on the type of residence being vacated: dorms - 5'x10'
one bedroom - 6x12
two bedroom - 10x15
four bedroom - 10x20

Baseball | Pitchers show potential

In the top of the eighth inning Baylor sent a pinch hitter, Aaron Miller, up to the plate to face Wildcat closer Daniel Edwards with two outs. On the 0-2 pitch, Miller sent a high-fly ball down the left-field line that fell in front of K-State's sophomore Adam Muenster. The ball was in the air so long it allowed Miller to get to second and it scored Dustin Dickerson from second to put Baylor on top 5-4.

"It was a good pitch, exactly what we wanted him to do – we wanted him to extend to hit the ball, hit down the line," Edwards said. "That's what he did and just happened to stay fair. Any other day of the year that's a foul ball."

K-State couldn't respond going three up and three down in the bottom of the eighth. It also stranded two on with one out in the ninth.

The Wildcats also buried themselves by giving up an early lead by giving up a run in three of the first four innings.

"The first three innings we weren't very focused," Hill said. "We gave them the first two runs."

Starting pitcher, junior Justin Murray, settled in and the K-State offense picked up its intensity – tying the game at four in the seventh after a ground ball by freshman Jason King knocked in junior Jordan Cruz.

The loss went to Chase Bayuk (1-3) after he relieved Murray and put the winning run on base.

SUNDAY: K-STATE 0, BAYLOR 3

Better weather conditions didn't warm up the K-State bats as the Wildcats could only muster four hits in a 3-0 loss to Baylor.

"We just got that feeling all day long, to be honest with you," said coach Brad Hill of the hitting performance. "You could see our at bats. Our guys weren't competitive at the plate."

The top of the third was the only half inning with scoring in it, as the Bears scored three runs. With runners on first and second base, Baylor's Adam Hornung took pitcher Lance Hoge's pitch to center field for a single knocking a run in, but the throw home was off target causing the runners to move to second and third. The play wasn't over as Hoge, who was backing up home plate, got the ball and threw it toward third, but air mailed it over the third baseman. Another run scored and put Hornung on third. Aaron Miller was the next batter and singled to knock in Hornung to put Baylor up 3-0.

"I think the play was there, but [Hoge] just rushed it," Hill said. "If he makes a good throw it is a bang-bang play. He just rushed it, but the ball should've never at the backstop anyway."

Wildcat pitching was good all game long, especially the relief pitching. Freshman Justin Lindsey came in relief of Hoge with two outs in the third. He pitched two and one-third innings not giving up any runs and striking out three.

Junior Ben Hornbeck came in next and pitched a scoreless two and two-thirds innings with five strikeouts.

"That's a bright spot," Hill said. "Justin Lindsey was very good. [Hornbeck] was the best. It was good to see him throw like he did today."

Hoge took the loss moving him to 1-3 on the season. Baylor's Shawn Tolleson threw a complete game striking out 12 K-State batters and walking two.

RELAY | 1st-timers realize effects

an adventure and God is testing me, but I always have hope."

THE 1ST-TIME RELAYER

Though she has never had cancer, nor has she been close with anyone who has endured the disease, Erin Johnson decided to participate in this year's Relay event for the first time to support cancer survivors and honor victims.

Johnson, freshman in pre-nursing and social work, walked in Friday's Relay with a team of residents from her floor in Moore Hall. Johnson said to raise money for Relay, she mailed letters asking for donations to her family and friends. She said she didn't expect a response, but was surprised at how many people wanted to support Relay.

"I guess it really does affect quite a few people," she said. "Tonight really has shown me that."
